INTRODUCTION.

To the Class of Eighty-five: —

It was my sincere hope, apart from all selfish motives for escaping the work, that this second report of your secretary to the class should be entirely the work of your first choice for that office, Walter A. Halbert, and as such, when completed, a cherished souvenir of a most beloved class-officer. It was he who began the task, now more than a year ago, and to him is due the credit of obtaining by far the largest part of the material for the report in the form of the lives which follow. Even after he had felt obliged to resign from the office of secretary, he continued the preparation of this report, and only gave it up when he found that his continued ill-health did not enable him to do more work than his regular daily duties called for. Since that time the work of completing the report has been my care, and it is for me to bear the responsibility for any defects or errors which appear in it as it stands.

In the Lives, I have endeavored to let each man tell his story in his own words as nearly as possible. Where any one has failed to throw information returned on his blank into the form of a sketch, I have endeavored to do it for him to the best of my ability; and where, as has sometimes happened, no return whatever has been made in reply to my numerous entreaties and autograph letters, I have had to supply such defects either from personal knowledge of the actions of the delinquents, or by inquiries among and information supplied by other classmates familiar with them. It has been my aim to have the returns as complete as possible, and I have made every endeavor to reach even those among the temporary members of the class who have never made any previous returns to class documents or inquiries. The result has been gratifying, and the report will be found to contain at least something about every one of our one hundred and ninety-one graduates, and about all of the temporary members, except four.

In the other portions of the report, I have followed, for the most part, the lines laid down in the reports of preceding class secretaries. I have, however, given continuity to the account of the class gatherings, the birth of the class baby, and other events especially relating to the class, thus forming, as it were, a brief class history of the last four years. The historical sketch of the University, covering the same period, is now a well-recognized feature of most class reports, and commends itself as a pleasant means of enabling even the most distant of us to keep track with the progress of our Alma Mater.

There are two things about which I feel in duty bound to make mention. The first of them is the writing of the class lives, covering the time of each man's life before graduation. There are still many graduates who have not written them, and I would fain impress upon those who are still in default the importance of so doing. In October next I shall have these manuscript lives now in my possession bound, for their better preservation and more handy reference. I shall be glad to have additions before that time, and will send thin blank-books to all who wish them for the purpose of writing such sketches. These lives are of considerable value in many ways as aids to the secretary, and the University authorities at the library assure me that they deem the writing of these lives as of much value to the University as well.

Second to be mentioned, but surely first in importance, is the class fund. The amount of the original subscriptions was small, much smaller than that of any of the classes either preceding us for some years, or succeeding us. Even now I feel sure that there are some (and I include here both graduates and temporary members of the class, for both alike are interested in that they can all share equally in its benefits) who have not had an opportunity to subscribe. There are others who, on leaving college, felt unable to subscribe anything at the time, and still others who promised to subscribe in a year or two, but have not as yet sent in the amount, or any instalment. I appeal to all of these men who have not subscribed and are able, and to any others who desire to increase the subscriptions already made, to come forward and help by their aid to place the fund where it ought to be. I also make request that the men who have subscribed give a little more attention to the calls upon them for payment. This month falls due the fifth and last instalment, and yet a large part of the money due on the first four payments is still unpaid. Certainly, the present state of the fund is far from satisfactory, and from no fault of the officers who have it in charge. A detailed statement of the accounts, by the custodian, Mr. Storrow, appears in the body of this report.

I propose, with your approval, to publish the next class report in 1892, the following one in 1895, and all succeeding ones at the customary interval of five years, contemporaneously with the appearance of the quinquennial catalogue, and the reports of other classes.

It is my intention, if kept sufficiently informed, to read at each Commencement Day meeting an informal report of events of especial interest to the class which have happened to its members during the preceding year, such as marriages, births, deaths, elections to offices, changes of business and residence, etc.: and so bridge over the longer intervals between the printed class reports. The success of these informal reports must depend on your voluntary communications to me.

Hoping that the best of good fortune may attend all the good fellows of our class until 1892, I bid you a farewell until my next report.

Your friend and classmate,

HENRY MORLAND WILLIAMS.

RECORD OF THE CLASS.

June, 1885 — June, 1888.

NOTE.

Although some of the following sketches were prepared after the work of completing this report was placed in my hands in February last, for the sake of uniformity they were only brought down to June, 1888, so as to correspond with the majority, which were written previous to that date. — H. M. W.

VICTOR CLIFTON ALDERSON.

"From 1885 to 1887 I was Superintendent of Public Schools in Dublin, Ind. I delivered a number of lectures on education, and wrote for the educational journals. In the summer of 1887 I came to Englewood to take charge of the High School. In December, 1887, I addressed the Indiana State Teachers' Association on Educational Psychology. In August, 1887, I was in Nebraska lecturing and instructing teachers at institutes. The West is to be my home."

RICHARD ALDRICH.

Returned to his home, Providence, R.I., and on Aug. 1, 1885, became one of the staff of the "Providence Journal." He served first as a reporter, having especial connection with the commercial departments and statistics, and was later an assistant editor. He is now (April, 1888) in Leipsic, Germany, and it is his intention to spend the rest of the year in Europe.

ARTHUR LINCOLN ALLEN.

He entered the Harvard Law School, and is taking the full course of three years. Tried the bar examinations in Suffolk County, and as a result was admitted to practice in January, 1888.

HORACE DAVID ARNOLD.

"My story is short and uneventful. After graduating from college, I entered the Harvard Medical School, where I have been pursuing the regular three years' course. I expect to graduate this spring, but shall continue my studies a year or more before beginning to practise medicine."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society.

CHARLES HEATH ATKINSON.

"From Class Day, 1885, to December, 1886, my working days were all devoted to the study of mechanical engineering at Massachusetts Institute of Technology with the class of '87. In December, 1886, I was obliged to give up work, owing to a general breaking down of my health, and I was ordered off to Bermuda, where I stayed until the middle of April. During July, August, and September, 1887, I travelled abroad in England, France, Switzerland, and Germany. In November I began to aid in some experimental work for the firm of Geo. Draper & Sons, of Hopedale, Mass., at Woonsocket, R.I.; but the balmy breezes of the Prohibition State drove me from my position, and I was forced to retreat to the orange groves of Florida at Interlachen. My health has improved so much since that I am able to comply promptly with the request of our busy secretary, although just out of the saddle after a twenty-mile ride. I am now doing a little work for the firm of Francis & Long, of Interlachen, Fla., and hope to be able to attend the triennial dinner with a good appetite, and in good training."

CLARENCE WALTER AYER.

"My first two years out of college were spent almost entirely in teaching college-preparatory branches, particularly the Classics and French. During the whole of the first year and one term of the second I was an assistant teacher at Dummer Academy, in South Byfield, Mass. (near Newburyport); during a part of the second term I was principal of the High School, at Ashland, Mass.; later I was employed for a short time as a reporter for the 'Boston Daily Advertiser;' and towards the end of March I received, through the Dean of Harvard College (Prof. C. L. Smith), an appointment for the rest of the school year as private tutor in college-entrance work, my place of residence being Northampton, Mass. The long summer vacations of both these years were passed mostly at my father's residence in Haverhill, Mass.

"During my third year (1887–88) I took a graduate course at Harvard in English and Italian Literature, as a candidate for the degree of A.M. I paid my way by doing the musical criticism for the "Advertiser," during the three months preceding the mid-year examinations, and later on, by private tutoring outside the college, mostly in English. I lived in Cambridge all through the year, — first on Story street, then as proctor in College House. At Commencement, June, 1888, I received my degree of A.M."

Has published a four-part, male-voice, song, "The Dreamer."

WILLIAM FRANCIS BACON.

"Stayed out a year after graduation, and in October, 1886, entered the first-year class at the Harvard Law School. Returned to the Law School last October, and am still studying there. I expect to take the full course of three years."

Is a member of the Austin Law Club and of the Choate Chapter of the $\Phi \Delta \Phi$, a Greek-Letter Fraternity composed of law students in different colleges.

STEPHEN ARNOLD BAILEY.

"Of the three summers which have passed since June, 1885, two I spent at my home in Trenton, Mo. The summer of 1886 I spent in Germany and France. During the rest of the time, until Feb. 1, 1887, I taught French and German in the Cathedral School of St. Paul, founded by Mrs. A. T. Stewart, at Garden City, L.I. Since that date I have been a student in the Harvard Law School, being now in the second year of the course. I hope to complete it in 1889.

WILLIAM HENRY BALDWIN, Jr.

"After graduation, my intention was to study law for one year at least, and to follow the profession if it seemed fitting.

"In November, 1885, began a course of railroad law to prepare for a Western railroad life. On Feb. 1, 1886, went to Omaha, and worked in the statistical department of the Union Pacific R'y Co. From May 1 to August 1, was in the Boston office of the company. August 1 to December 1, in the Auditing Department at Omaha; December 1 to May 1, 1887, was in General Traffic Department. May 1, was appointed Division Freight and Passenger Agent for lines in Montana, headquarters at Butte City, Montana, where I have since lived.

"Have travelled all through the West, and am intensely interested in Western life.

"College associations have been revived by a Harvard Club of twenty-eight members at Omaha, and a University Club in Montana, with four Harvard graduates."

Before entering the employ of the Union Pacific Ry., he went to the Harvard Law School and remained four months. He was in the Thayer Law Club.

HENRY BARTLETT.

"With the exception of six months in the Engineering Department of the Boston & Lowell R.R., have been in the service of the Pennsylvania R.R. Co., passing through the different grades (apprentice) of the Mechanical Department."

STEPHEN SMITH BARTLETT.

"The year after graduation I spent in Europe; returned in the fall of 1886, and entered the Harvard Law School."

FERDINAND WINTHROP BATCHELDER.

Was in the employ of a firm of cotton buyers for two years, with a residence at Gainesville, Fla., for the greater part of each year. Is now in Boston, in the insurance business, with residence in Cambridge. On June 15, 1886, was married at Jamaica Plain, Mass., to Miss Bessie Taylor Clark, daughter of the Hon. John T. Clark, of Boston.

LORING WOART BATTEN.

Studied theology at Philadelphia, and is now rector of St. George's Church, Philadelphia. On March 18, 1886, was married at Woodbury, N.J., to Claribel Ware, daughter of Richard M. and Rebecca C. Ware. On Christmas Day, 1886, a daughter, Emma Couch, was born.

HARRY CLAYTON BEAMAN.

Is in the hotel business. On Nov. 10, 1887, was married at Chillicothe, O., to Jennie H. Bartlett, daughter of Joseph W. and Philena R. H. Bartlett.

JOHN WHEELER BEMIS.

"Very soon after leaving college I entered the office of Messrs. Allen & Kenway, Architects, to get a general idea of the work needed. In the autumn of 1886 I went as a special student in architecture to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and at the end of the year entered the office of Messrs. Hartwell & Richardson, where I remained till leaving for Paris to enter the École des Beaux Arts."

ROBERT SLOANE BICKFORD.

Entered the Harvard Law School in September, 1885, and remained one year. A year in the stock-brokerage business in Boston followed; is now a private tutor with his father, at 13 Temple place, Boston. Is Graduate Secretary of the Harvard Chapter of Delta Upsilon.

FRANKLIN SWIFT BILLINGS.

"The summer of 1885 I passed in the woods of Maine, hunting and fishing. In September I went to a sheep ranch in the central part of Kansas, where I stayed until the following June. I found it a most delightful life, and if there had been any money in this business I should have stuck to it. In June, 1886, I came East, and again passed the summer and autumn in the wilds of Maine. The 1st of January, 1887, I started in New York City with an uncle of mine in the Brazil trade, under the firm name of F. Swift Billings, and in this I am still working."

Is a member of the Puritan Club, of Boston, and of the Harvard Club, of New York City.

CHARLES WESLEY BIRTWELL.

"Since September, 1885, I have been General Agent of the Boston Children's Aid Society, — an association devoted to practical humanitarian work in behalf of wayward, destitute, and exposed children in and near Boston."

Is a member of the governing boards of some of the most active and useful charitable organizations in Boston.

GEORGE RICHARD BLINN.

"I began to study law the summer of 1885, when I obtained a position as messenger in the Court-House, Boston. This I held until October, 1886, when I entered the office of Judge George Z. Adams, as law student. I was admitted to the Suffolk Bar, Feb. 4, 1887, and am now associated with Judge Adams, under the style of Adams & Blinn, at 30 Court street, Boston.

"In June, 1886, I was married to Clara A. Pollard, and took up my residence in Bedford, Mass."

ABNER ZAZA BOWEN.

After graduating, taught school in New York for a year. Then studied law and tutored, and is now managing clerk for Roger Foster, Attorney, 206 Broadway. Is a member of the Twenty-second Regiment, National Guard, S.N.Y., and of the Republican County Committee from the Fourth Assembly District. He says: "In short, I have been grinding in New York since leaving college, and have done nothing else. Am one of the crack shots of the Twenty-second, with a lively interest in politics and young ladies."

His first name, Alva, has been changed to Abner.

FRANK JOSIAH BOWMAN.

"During the first two years since graduation I studied law with the law firm of Bennett & Green, at Sterling, Ill. In October of 1887 I passed the examination for admission to the bar of Illinois. During the following year I directed my attention towards finding a desirable place to practise law. With this object in view, I visited Chicago, Kansas City, Dakota Territory, and Washington Territory. I spent two months at Spokane Falls, W.T. At Aberdeen, Dak., I was engaged in business for a short time. Not being pleased, however, with the prospects at this place, I returned to Sterling, and accepted a situation offered me by Bennett & Green."

Married to Anna May Trowe, and has one child, Frank Elliott Bowman.

ROLAND WILLIAM BOYDEN.

"I taught as assistant in the High School at Beverly for the last three months of 1885, taking the place of a teacher who was sick. On her recovery, I entered the Harvard Law School, where I am at present, in the third-year class. I passed the examination for admission to the Suffolk Bar, Massachusetts, last December. Since entering the Law School, I have devoted myself almost wholly to law, base-ball, and foot-ball. I think that nothing has happened to me which would interest the class." Was a substitute pitcher on the University Nine of 1886, and a regular member of the Nine in 1887, as pitcher and centre-field. Played foot-ball with the University Eleven during the fall seasons of 1886 and 1887, as a half-back, in several of the most important games.

CARLETON BRADBROOK.

"After leaving college, studied one year in Germany at the Universities of Göttingen and Heidelberg. Remained one year in Paris and six months in Seville, Spain. Since February, have been pursuing the junior law course at Columbia Law School, New York City."

MARTIN LUTHER BRADFORD, Jr.*

When death comes to one of our number whose life was the essence of purity and manliness, we pay tribute to ourselves by honoring him.

The life of Martin Luther Bradford, Jr., was an example of modesty, earnestness of purpose, and strength of character. These qualities, combined with a high moral and religious ideal, commanded the love and respect of all who knew him.

He was born on Nov. 6, 1861, in Dorchester, Mass. His father, Martin Luther Bradford, a native of Boston, is a descendant of William Bradford, first Governor of Plymouth County, and a descendant of Samuel Luther, who left Massachusetts with Roger Williams, and settled the town of Warren, R.I. His mother, Abby Child Gardner, was a native of Warren, R.I.

His inheritance was the physical, moral, and intellectual vigor which was evinced throughout his life. As a child his companions were boys and girls who have developed into noble men and women. At the age of fourteen he was graduated from the Dorchester-Everett Grammar School, and entered the Roxbury Latin School to prepare for Harvard. From that time our friendship was of the closest nature. Always a leader, he was our admiration in his school work and out-of-door sports. He was our foot-ball captain, and the captain of our First Company in the School Regiment. During these years, we saw the man in the youth, and we looked up to him for his judgment and knowledge.

In 1881, at the age of twenty, he was graduated from the Roxbury Latin School, and entered Harvard. We all knew him for the next four years. As vice-president of our class, as an athlete, musician, and student, he was closely identified with all those associations which we now hold so sacred. He was a member of the D. K. E., the Alpha Delta Phi, and Hasty Pudding Club, and took great interest in music as the president of the Pierian Sodality.

His studies were principally confined to Chemistry, Natural History, and German, as he always had in view a careful preparation for the study and practice of medicine.

In the fall of 1885 he entered the Harvard Medical School, and was associated with Storer, Dunham, and Mumford in special work. In the summer of 1886 he was an assistant at the Boston Dispensary. In the fall he was made an assistant in surgery in the Out-patient Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital. In the early spring of 1887 he was interested in special histological work. Later he was elected to Dr. Green's class in obstetrics, and gave special attention to practical obstetrics.

It has been difficult for some to understand why he, who had everything to live for, and who had shown exceptional ability in his profession, should have found his life a burden.

It developed, however, that in the last fortnight of his life he passed through an intense mental and physical strain, by attempting to accomplish more than was possible. The result was complete nervous exhaustion, from overwork and loss of sleep. The sights he saw and his comparative powerlessness to relieve the suffering of his patients wrought too powerfully upon his sensitive and sympathetic nature; but his proud, brave spirit did not give way until his complete mental and physical exhaustion made the outlook seem utterly hopeless. Every detail of his work was carefully attended to until the last moment of his life, and his friends had no warning of his purpose.

On the twentieth day of June, 1887, he took his life at his room on McLean street, Boston.

W. H. B., Jr.

At a meeting of our class, held in Boston, June 23, the following resolutions were adopted: —

Class of '85. — It has pleased an All-wise Providence to remove from our midst our beloved classmate, Martin Luther Bradford, Jr.

His earnestness, his dignity, and his true manliness commanded our respect and admiration, while the charm of his manner and the breadth of his interests endeared him to us all.

The purity of his life, the loftiness of his ideals, his never-failing sympathy, and rare sweetness of nature will cause us ever to remember him with honor and love.

We feel most keenly the loss our class has suffered, and our heartfelt sympathy is with those to whom he was bound by closer ties.

THEODORE DUNHAM,
MALCOLM STORER,
JOHN R. MacARTHUR,
Committee.

CHARLES FRANKLIN BRANDT.

Studied law at the Columbia College Law School and in law offices in New York City. Is now practising his profession in that city.

WILLIAM FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Took a post-graduate course of study at Harvard during the year 1885–86. Returned to his home in Ohio in the fall of 1886, owing to ill-health, and has since been occupied only in private study.

FREDERICK HARRIS BRIGGS.

Some time after graduation he joined the staff of the "San Francisco Examiner," to take charge of the illustrations. He still remains there.

HUGH HENRY BROGAN.

Was the first man to be awarded the new John Tyndall scholarship established in 1885. As holder of this he went to Germany in 1886, and has since been pursuing his studies in physics at Berlin.

ARTHUR LANGMAID CALHOUN.

"After graduation went to my home in St. John, N.B., unsettled as to what to do. Spent some time waiting for the assignment of a position for which I was an applicant; but a better man got it. In September, 1886, struck out for the 'hub of the universe,' where I got a chance on the 'Traveller,' and have remained ever since. Am doing the ordinary work of a reporter, with some dramatic criticism, and am shaping my course as much as possible toward literary work."

FREDERIC IVES CARPENTER.

"During the fourteen months immediately following graduation I was engaged in travelling in Europe. Three months I spent in the study of the French language and literature, at Geneva, Switzerland; three months attending lectures at the École Libre des Sciences Politiques, in Paris; eight months in travel and study in England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, etc. On returning I spent one year in the study of law in Chicago. The present year I have given to the study of English and of general literature."

Is a member of the Chicago University Club and of the Chicago Amateur Athletic Club.

CHARLES FREDERIC CARRIER.

"In the summer after graduation I went to Europe, and, besides a little travel, studied Political Science at Leipsic and Berlin. In the fall of 1887 it seemed best to me to begin my professional studies in earnest, and accordingly I returned to Cambridge and entered the first-year class in the Harvard Law School."

ROYAL PHELPS CARROLL.

Since graduation he has spent a large part of his time in travelling, in all parts of the world. He has visited Japan, and hunted tigers in Africa, besides "doing" countries more familiar to the ordinary traveller. But little of his time has been spent in the United States. When at home he may be found at the Knickerbocker Club, in New York, which still remains his headquarters.

JOHN DERTHICK CARY.

"Have been at home in Richfield Springs since graduation, helping my father and tutoring. Have also done a little literary work, and occasionally read in public; the only notable work of that kind being a reading and lecture which I called "An Evening with Marc Cook," delivered at home and in Utica; was kindly handled by the papers.

"Was married Sept. 22, 1887, to Martha G. White, daughter of Frank and Anna E. White, of Richfield Springs; W. W. Winslow and Henry F. Lewis, of the class, acting as groomsmen.

"Received the degree of A.M. from Hamilton College, in June, 1887."

ARTHUR PATTERSON CHADBOURNE.

"In Harvard Medical School, until July 1, 1888."

ALLEN HOWARD CHAMBERLAIN.

"In October, 1885, I entered the Harvard Medical School, where I have continued my studies until the present time. On April 1, 1888, I began my term of service as Second Ophthalmic Interne at the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary."

WINTHROP ASTOR CHANLER.

"After leaving college, I travelled for about a year in different parts of the world. While in Italy, in the summer of 1886, I became engaged to be married. After a trip home to attend the 250th Anniversary, I returned to Italy, and was married in December of that same year to Miss Margaret Terry. We reached America in the June following, and have been here ever since. I am at present living in Washington, and shall probably continue to do so for two winters to come. A daughter, Laura Astor Chanler, was born at Barrytown, N.Y., on Sept. 30, 1887."

THOMAS HERBERT CHASE.

"In September, 1885, I returned to college, and studied for a year in the Graduate Department. I spent the following summer and autumn abroad, and finally, in February, 1887, I took a position as a clerk in the publishing house of Macmillan & Co., in New York City. I have been engaged in mercantile life in this city ever since, and am now employed in the business end of The Century Company."

HORACE CLARK.

After graduation studied medicine at the Harvard Medical School, and is a member of the Boylston Medical Society. While still an undergraduate was married on Nov. 10, 1882, to Sarah Cushman McIntosh, at Carthage, N.Y., and has now three children, — Lucia, born at Somerville, Mass., Oct. 25, 1883; Elizabeth Woodruff, born at Newton, Mass., May 14, 1884; and Lemuel Baldwin, born at Sackett's Harbor, N.Y., Aug. 30, 1887.

LEONARD BROWN CLARK.

"Since graduating, in 1885, I have been attending the Harvard Medical School, and have done nothing outside of the work there."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society.

JOHN CODMAN.

"Anticipated five-eighths Senior year's work during Junior year. Left college October, 1884, for France. Was tutor in an American family residing in Pau for six months. Returned to United States in April, 1885, via Bordeaux, Paris, Hamburg, London. Entered the office of Wm. C. Codman & J. G. Freeman, Real Estate Agents, in October, 1885. Became a member of the firm Feb. 1, 1886. With the exception of five months in North Carolina, have been in Boston since that date."

Is a member of the Puritan Club and of the Bostonian Society.

NATHAN EMERY COFFIN.

"Was admitted to the Iowa Bar in October, 1886, and have been practising in Des Moines ever since."

ALLANIAH DAVIS COLE.

"Most of the first year after graduation I spent at home, doing miscellaneous reading; managing in that time to read between forty and fifty choice books.

"In June, 1886, I presented to the Faculty of my first Alma Mater (Kentucky Wesleyan College) a thesis, the result of my leisure hours, and received the A.M. degree.

"In November, 1886, having concluded to locate at Maysville, Ky., I was appointed for a term of four years Master Commissioner and Receiver of the Mason Circuit Court,—a position I value highly because of the rich experience to be gained from it.

"At the January term of court, 1887, license was given me to practise law, after an examination by three distinguished members of our bar, one of whom is a Harvard Law School graduate. Since then I have been admitted to the bar of our Court of Appeals, and have pursued the study and practice of my profession with unabated ardor and encouraging success. About a year ago I began to be interested in Odd-fellowship, and, as a consequence, am now a member of DeKalb Lodge and Pisgah Encampment.

"On the whole I think it can be safely said that I am doing pretty well; at least I see no reason to be dissatisfied."

EDWARD LYON COLLINS.

"For a year and a half after leaving Harvard I travelled in this country and abroad. On my return home I assumed active control of a large estate, to which, at my father's death, I was sole heir."

Is a member of the Boston Art Club.

JOHN JOSLIN COLONY.

"After graduating, I spent the next year at the Harvard Law School, taking special work. Since then, have held a position in the Cheshire Mills, Harrisville, N.H."

Trained and rowed on the University Crew in the spring of 1886, taking part in all the races.

WINTHROP COWDIN.

"After leaving college, I served an apprenticeship in a Wall-street broker's office, remaining with him one year. I then travelled somewhat, and then returned to New York. On Nov. 3, 1886, I was united in marriage with Miss Lena Tibbits Potter, daughter of Rt. Rev. Henry C. Potter, Bishop of New York. I am at present engaged in journalism, being the business manager of the 'New York Evening Telegram.'

"My life has been devoid of any remarkable incidents. I have held no public offices, written no books, or afflicted the community with any musical compositions. I divide my time equally between my farm at New Castle and the office."

HENRY BRINTON COXE, Jr.

Studied law at the University of Pennsylvania, received his degree, and was admitted to the bar. On Jan. 5, 1888, was married, in Boston, to Miss Ruth Lovering. Is a member of the Rittenhouse and other clubs in Philadelphia.

GEORGE ARTHUR CRAIGIN.

"Since graduation I have spent the winters at my home in Boston, taking the regular course in the Harvard Medical School. During the summer of 1885 stayed at my summer house in Dublin, N.H. The vacation of 1886 was spent pleasantly in taking two of my young friends on a trip through Eastern New York and Middle New England; and last summer, 1887, was occupied with work in the 'Out-patient Departments' of some of our hospitals."

ADAMS CROCKER.

Returned to Fitchburg, Mass., and has since been engaged in the manufacture of cotton yarns and dress goods with the Cleghorn and the Orswell mills of that city.

HAMILTON ROWAN CURTIS.

Has been travelling or at his home in Boston since graduation. Is a member of the Somerset, Country, and Longwood Cricket Clubs.

GRAFTON DULANY CUSHING.

"Three years at Harvard Law School. Europe or Newport in the summer."

GEORGE FAUNTLEROY DAVIDSON.

"Came home after a year in the Law School in Cambridge; entered class '87, Law Department, University of California; studied hard until Feb. 25, 1887, when I broke down from overwork, and have not been able to do a stroke of work, mental or physical, since that date."

BANCROFT GHERARDI DAVIS.

"Since graduation I have been studying law at the Harvard Law School. In April, 1887, I assisted at the birth of the "Harvard Law Review." In January, 1888, I was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar. After graduating from the school, I shall be in the office of L. L. Scaife, Esq., of Boston."

Was a member of the Thayer and Pow-wow Law Clubs.

FREDERIC ADRIAN DELANO.

"During August and part of September, 1885, I was with a party making a 'reconnoissance' of certain coal-fields in Colorado, and in October began work for the C., B., & Q. R.R. in the company's locomotive erecting shops at Aurora, Ill. My shop experience was broken by two vacations, — one spent at home and one on a trip to the Pacific Slope. In July, 1887, I began the work I am still engaged on, of investigating the manufacture of steel rails and the causes of certain failures in the service, with a view of ascertaining how and where the best steel rail can be rolled for the least money. Incidentally with my service for the C., B., & Q. R.R., emergencies have arisen which have permitted me to learn the workings of the departments with which I have not been directly connected."

Has published an article on "Steel Rails" in the proceedings of the Institute of Mining Engineers, of which body he is a member. Is also a member of the Harvard and University Clubs, of Chicago.

PAUL SHIPMAN DRANE.

After graduation taught two years in the Dudley Institute, of Frankfort, Ky., and then joined the force of the "New York Sun" as a reporter. Is a member of the Fellowcraft Club, of New York City.

WILLIAM KINNICUTT DRAPER.

Studied medicine in New York City. Is a member of the New York Harvard Club.

THEODORE DUNHAM.

"Since leaving college I have been engaged in the study of medicine at the Harvard Medical School. My time has been devoted chiefly to the school curriculum, and my career has been free from adventure. In March last I received an appointment on the surgical side of the fourth division at Bellevue Hospital, and shall enter upon my service there Oct. 1, 1888."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society and of the Tavern Club, of Boston.

PERCY DAVID DWIGHT.

"After graduation I came to Detroit, entered a law office, and was admitted to the Michigan Bar, September, 1887."

Is a member of the Detroit Club and of the recently formed Detroit University Club, of that city.

EDWARD TYLOR EDGERLY.

"Upon returning to my home in Ottumwa, Ia., I obtained a position in the Iowa National Bank of that place, where I remained until August, 1886. I concluded to enter the medical profession, and in September of 1886 I entered the Chicago Medical College, and I have just finished the second year's work at that institution. I am at present attending a spring course of lectures given at the Rush Medical College, of Chicago. Everything being favorable, I shall be graduated about the 1st of April, next. My address is Ottumwa, Ia."

JAMES LYMAN FISK.

Has been engaged in manufacturing since graduation, being interested in the Fiskdale Mills, the business offices of which are in Boston. Continues to reside at his home in Cambridge.

FRANCIS BRINLEY FOGG.

After graduation, he entered the Law Department of Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn., and in due time was graduated from that institution. He then began the practice of law in Nashville. He spent the summer of 1887 in Europe.

GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, Jr.

"After leaving college I was connected with the law office of Noble & Smith, St. Albans, Vt., Attorneys for Central Vermont R.R., where I studied law until the 1st of September, 1887. In October I entered the Columbia Law School, of New York City, where I continued my law studies, and also took lectures in the School of Political Science of the same institution."

Was first vice-president of the student's body in the Columbia School of Political Science.

SAMUEL LYNDE FOSTER.

"After graduation I accepted a position in Hermon, N.Y., as principal of a Union School; remained only one term. Returned to Massachusetts, and after a month spent in Cambridge enjoying myself, I began at the factory of Thomson-Houston Electric Co., in Lynn. In June, 1886, I was sent to Detroit, Mich., to install an electric-light plant, and remained there nine months. I returned to Boston, and in April, 1887, was sent to Ann Arbor, Mich., to 'straighten out the electric-light plant' there. I accepted the position of Superintendent of the company in Ann Arbor, and of expert for the Thomson-Houston electric-light system in the State of Michigan. Was called to San Francisco, Cal., in September, 1887, by the illness of my mother. Have been employed on this coast since coming here as electrical expert to straighten out the electric-light plant at Oakland, Cal., and at Reno, Nev., and to install a plant in Pasadena, Cal. I have been offered the position of General Manager of the Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co., in Detroit, and only await the ratification by the Board of Directors."

AMOS TUCK FRENCH.

"I have had a checkered career since June, 1885, from a business point of view. Having spent the summer after graduation, at Newport, R.I., and having played on the Harvard Polo Team, which won the championship cups, I went to Richmond, Va., on the 1st of October, and took a position (a good way) under the General Manager of the R. & A. R.R. On Dec. 2, 1885, I was married at Newport, R.I., to Miss Pauline LeRoy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant LeRoy, of New York. During the winter of 1886 I studied law at the office of Messrs. Alexander & Green, New York. In May, 1886, I entered the office of Messrs. Van Emburgh & Atterbury, stockbrokers. In June I took charge of their branch office at Newport, and superintended that end of the wire until October. On Nov. 30, 1886, a daughter was born unto me at Newport, and was christened Pauline LeRoy French. She had the honor to be voted the 'class cradle of 1885,' and received a beautiful silver porringer and spoon from the class, for which she is very grateful. To prove that she is strong enough to bear this honor gracefully, I may mention that her waist measurement is now twenty-three inches, only seven inches less than her father's when he made his bicycle records in the Freshman year. Since February, 1887, I have lived in New York and the vicinity. In June, 1887, I bought a seat in the New York Stock Exchange, where I have been studying (from a distance) the manners and customs of Jay Gould. Now I have been elected Acting Treasurer of the Manhattan Trust Co., of New York, in which I hope to make a career."

Is a member of Knickerbocker, Harvard, and several other clubs in New York City.

JOHN HAYS GARDINER.

"After leaving college, I spent two years in the Harvard Law School; but my health broke down towards the end of the second year, and I have taken some pupils this year (1887–88)."

CHARLES FREEMAN GILMAN.

Entered the Civil Service of the United States as a member of the Boston Custom-House force, where he has since remained. Was married on June 16, 1887, at Boston, to Miss Alice Stevens Clark. Is a member of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Massachusetts.

CHARLES BERTIE GLEASON.

"My life has not been one of wild excitement; in fact, about as monotonous as it well could be. I have neither married nor died; nor yet have I been elected to Congress or appointed proctor. About a year ago I was chosen poet for a centennial celebration (an honor which a friend was kind enough to decline before notice had reached me, for fear that I might become a professional), and last fall I was offered a position in a Deaf and Dumb Asylum at a munificent salary. Otherwise my three years out of college have left me what they found me."

Received the degree of A.M. from Harvard at Commencement, 1886.

JOHN McGREGOR GOODALE.

"Since graduation I have taken two years of the course at the Harvard Law School. My summers have been given to digressions into surveying and banking. I am now a law clerk in New York City."

Played lacrosse on the University teams of 1886 and 1887, and was a member of the Pow-wow Law Club. Is a member of the Harvard Club, of New York.

ROBERT STETSON GORHAM.

"In the fall of 1886 I entered the office of J. C. Hammond, at Northampton, Mass., to study law. In the fall of 1887 I entered the second-year class at the Harvard Law School, where I have been a student since. Was admitted to the Suffolk County Bar at the examination last December. While at the Law School have done a little athletic work. Last year I pulled on the tug-of-war team at the Mott Haven games, and this year I am rowing substitute on the 'Varsity crew."

Member of the Thayer Law Club, and an editor of the "Harvard Law Review."

WALTER FOLGER GREENMAN.

"The routine work of the Divinity School, together with considerable preaching during the last year, has required all my time since graduation."

FRED SUMNER HAINES.

In the fall of 1885 went to Rochester, Minn., and engaged in the banking business, where he soon rose to the position of assistant cashier of the Rochester National Bank. Was married on Feb. 14, 1888, at the same place, to Miss Carrie Woodruff Faitoute.

WALTER ALLEN HALBERT.

"Immediately after Commencement, 1885, I began work in an insurance office in Binghampton, N.Y. In August, 1885, I made a contract with an insurance company, under which I took up my residence in Kansas City, Mo., in the fall of that year. I have since resided in Kansas City, employed as general agent and cashier of the insurance company. Nothing of interest has happened to me during the last three years."

WILLIAM ALEXANDER HAMMOND.

"In August, 1885, following the June I left college, an appointment was made me to the Lectureship in Classics and German in the University of King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia, the oldest college of British origin in Canada. This position I continue to occupy. In 1886 this university conferred on me the degree of M.A. ad eundem, and in the following year the students elected me president of the Athletic Association of the university. In the same year (1887) I was elected a member of the Hellenic Society, of London. These few happenings constitute the chief events of my rather prosy three years since leaving Harvard, though, of course, the time has been relieved by the orthodox amount of fishing, boating, and kindred diversions, which ordinarily enter into the life of college men. I should like to add a note about the delightful old university town of Windsor on the banks of the tidal Avon, and in the land of Evangeline, but I fear the class secretary would vote me out of order, seeing that he has asked me for facts about myself rather than about the place in which I dwell."

OTTO RHEINHARD HANSEN.

"Immediately after graduation in 1885, in company with S. S. Bartlett, Carpenter, E. L. Thayer, McArthur, and Sanford, all of '85, I sailed for Europe. With them I spent some months in travel along the usual route taken by tourists. Four months I studied Roman law at the Berlin University, and two months at Heidelberg. On returning to the United States, I entered the Harvard Law School, and am now in the second-year class."

While at Heidelberg he was a member of the Karlsruhensia Student Society, and as such took part in the celebrated celebration of the 500th anniversary of the founding of that university. Was a member of the Pow-wow Law Club, and is an editor of the "Harvard Law Review."

CHARLES MATHER HARRINGTON.

Studied law and was admitted to the bar. Is now managing clerk for the law firm of Day & Romer, of Buffalo, N.Y.

JAMES MOTT HARTSHORNE, Jr.

Not having been fortunate, or unfortunate, enough to inherit a fortune, I was obliged, after leaving college, to go to work. The stock business appeared to me a favorable field for operations, so to the learning of the stock business I applied myself. A trip to Europe during the summer of 1886, and another to the Bermudas during the winter of 1888, have been my only dissipations. May 5, 1888, I became a member of the New York Stock Exchange, where I may now be found daily making bread and butter.

DANIEL LYMAN HAZARD.

"On leaving college, I went to farming with my father, continuing in that occupation until March, 1887, when I was offered the position of book-keeper for J. C. Tucker, Jr., dealer in lumber, coal, grain, building material, groceries, &c., and have retained the position to the present time. Am not yet married, and see no immediate prospect of being."

WILLIAM HENRY HIDDEN, Jr.

After graduating, went almost immediately to St. Paul, Minn., and engaged in business with a large wholesale establishment. In October, 1886, he returned to his home in Cambridge, and is now acting as Eastern Manager of the Dakota Loan and Trust Co., with an office in Boston.

HENRY THEODORE HILDRETH.

"Towards the close of my Senior year I was appointed to a Parker Fellowship, which I am now holding for the third year. In consequence of this appointment, I sailed for Greece in September following my graduation, touching on the way — partly owing to cholera and consequent quarantine complications — at Florence, Naples, Smyrna, and Constantinople; and reaching Athens early in November. I remained in Greece until the following May as a member of the American School of Classical Studies. I spent most of the time in Athens, but in March and April I made, with another member of the school, an extensive pedestrian tour through the Peloponnesus. In the following October, after some travelling in Germany, I matriculated as a student of Classical Philology at the University of Berlin, where I have continued till the present time. In the spring of 1887 I made another short visit to Greece, for the completion of some unfinished work, — stopping at Venice on the way, — and contracted a serious illness which lasted the whole summer, and thus frustrated the plan I had on leaving home of taking the degree of Ph.D. abroad. In the spring of 1888, in company with two other American students of Classics at the university, I made a short visit to Italy, spending nearly three weeks in Rome, and also visiting Milan, Florence, Venice, and other places of interest."

JOSEPH ADNA HILL.

"The first year after graduation I was engaged in teaching at the William Penn Charter School in Philadelphia. The next year I went to Baltimore and studied History and Political Economy at the Johns Hopkins University. The following summer I spent in travelling in Europe. Returning to this country last October, I came back to Harvard and registered at U. 5, as a graduate student. I look forward to teaching as my profession. I am not married."

Is a member of the Harvard Club, of Maryland.

HARRY RAYMOND HILLIARD.

Returned to his home, Pittsburg, Penn., in the fall of 1885, and was employed for over a year in the Mechanic's National Bank. Was unemployed when last heard from. Is a member of the Pittsburg, and Pittsburg Cricket Club.

MARLAND COGSWELL HOBBS.

"The summer of 1885 I divided between the White Mountains and the law office of Avery & Hobbs, of Boston. In the fall I entered the Harvard Law School, where I remained till the first of March, 1888. While in the school, I was a member of the Thayer and Pow-wow Law Clubs and editor-in-chief of the "Harvard Law Review," a law magazine published by the students of the school.

"In the spring of 1887 I was awarded a Bowdoin prize of $100 for an essay on "The Twelfth Article of Jay's Treaty." In the fall of the same year the Charles Sumner prize, which was then awarded for the first time, was given me for an essay on "The Experience of the Last Half-Century in the Light it throws upon a Possible General Resort to Arbitration as a Substitute for War." During most of the time I spent in the Law School I acted as Harvard correspondent of the "New York Times" and of the "Boston Journal."

"For part of the summer of 1887 I was clerk pro tem. of the West Roxbury District Court of the city of Boston. Returning to the Law School, I was appointed proctor; but in March, 1888, having been appointed by the Governor Clerk of the Brookline Police Court, I resigned my other office, gave up my room at Cambridge, and returned to Brookline to live. In January, 1888, I was admitted to the Suffolk Bar, Boston, where I expect to practise my profession."

HARRY HOLDEN.

Is in the wholesale department of a large dry-goods house in Boston, living in the city.

JOHN FRANCIS HOLLAND.

"Two years in Chicago, the remainder in Cambridge. Acted as private tutor for two years, and am now taking a special course in the Harvard Law School."

WILLIAM PARMELEE HOMANS.

Has spent the greater part of the time since June, 1885, in Germany, France, and England, and the remainder in Baltimore, Md.

EDWIN HOWARD.

Has devoted himself to music, employing his time in vocal study, touring as a member of the well-known Harvard and other quartettes, and in managing concert companies. Has always made Boston his headquarters.

OSCAR SHAFTER HOWARD.

Has spent most of his time in California, engaging in various kinds of business, such as vineyardist, sugar-refining, insurance, etc. Has made a trip to Europe.

ALFRED WILLIAM HOYT.

Spent one year in Michigan, and the remainder of the time in New York City, in the banking-house of A. M. Hoyt & Co.

JOHN LA MONTE HURST.

"After taking my degree in 1885, I entered the editorial rooms of Messrs. Harper & Brothers, Publishers, New York. My health soon failed me, however, and I was obliged to go West. I am now located in Denver, Col., and engaged in the real estate and loan business."

CYRUS WENDELL IRISH.

Is teaching the Scientific courses at the Lowell, Mass., High School.

LOUIS LINCOLN JACKSON.

"Since graduation I have remained at Harvard as an assistant in the Chemical Laboratory. I have been engaged in research work, under the direction of Prof. H. B. Hill. Part of the work has been published, and the remainder will soon appear in the 'Proceedings of the American Academy.'"

ARTHUR STODDARD JOHNSON.

"I spent the summer after graduation, in England, France, and Germany, returning in October to read law in the Boston Law School.

As my eyes troubled me very much, I was obliged to give up all reading in the spring; consequently I spent most of my time travelling. In December of 1886 I took passage on a sailing-vessel, and after a voyage of nearly three months arrived in Melbourne. I remained in Australia three months, and then came home over the Pacific to San Francisco, thence home overland. During the past winter I have been assisting my father in his office work."

Is a member of the Puritan Club, of Boston.

HENRY WALTER JONES.

"Have lived at home since graduation, and nothing eventful has occurred outside of the usual routine of home life."

Is engaged in business with his father.

EDWARD KIRK KEEP.

"After leaving college I came to Buffalo, and began the study of the law. My life has been very uneventful, and devoted to work. I have done little or no travelling. With the exception of short trips to New York and the West, my time has been pretty much passed in my office. I have taken some interest in politics, although I have held no office."

ARTHUR KEITH.

Until July, 1886, student for A.M., at Harvard; then on Massachusetts Topographical Survey, and studying at Harvard; then, and now, on the United States Geological Survey, stationed at Washington. Received his degree of A.M. at Commencement, 1886. Is a member of the Washington Harvard Club.

DANIEL KELLEHER.

Has spent his time in tutoring two boys preparing for Harvard, and during the last year devoted part of the time to reading law. Has lived all the time at Syracuse, N.Y.

MAXIMILIAN LINDSAY KELLNER.

"The year 1885–86 I spent in Semitic study at the university, taking the degree of A.M. in June, 1886. My connection with the university I have kept up to the present time. In April, 1886, the trustees of the Episcopal Theological School of Cambridge invited me to become the instructor in Hebrew in that institution, the duties of which position I entered upon in September, and have continued to discharge up to the present time. I am also assistant minister at the Church of the Messiah, Boston (1885–). Since 1885 I have become a member of the American Oriental Society, the American Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, and the Harvard Biblical Club."

CHARLES CARROLL KING.

"Since graduating I have spent three years at the Harvard Law School. In addition to my regular work at the school, I have been Harvard correspondent for three years to the "New York Daily Tribune" and the "New York Daily World." I have also been ticket agent for the Boston & Albany R.R., at Harvard, for selling tickets to students at vacation rates for long distances. During the summer vacations I have been in the employ of the Vermont Mutual Insurance Company, at Montpelier, Vt. Thus it has happened that my time since graduation has been very closely occupied by steady and routine duties."

RALPH MARTIN LANE.

"Came to St. Louis in September, 1885. Health being bad, did not engage in any business; looked after interests of my family, who were then in Europe. Married my second cousin once removed, Julia Lane Ulrici, on Jan. 23, 1886. Some time since became interested in the Whitman Agricultural Company, and have recently been elected a director and vice-president."

JOHN LAWRENCE.

"Immediatey after Class Day, 1885, I started Westward for a trip around the world. Besides the ordinary places en route, I went to Mongolia, Peshawar, up the Persian Gulf to Bagdad, across the desert by camel to Damascus, and overland through Asia Minor, on horseback, to Constantinople. On my return home, after fourteen months, I entered the law office of Francis Peabody, Jr., Boston, as a student. On the 16th of June, 1887, I married Miss Martha Peabody, daughter of S. Endicott Peabody, Esq., of Salem, Mass. October, 1887, I entered the Harvard Law School, and took a house in Cambridge, No. 4 Garden street, where I expect to remain for one or two years more."

Member of the Pow-wow Law Club.

EUGENE LENT.

WILLIAM LEVERETT.

"Immediately after graduation I went to Belmont, Cal., where I taught for two years in Prof. W. T. Reid's large school for boys. The school is situated about twenty-five miles south of San Francisco. The branches in which I gave instruction were the Classics, English, and History. I remained in California for two years, when I decided to return to the East and begin the study of law. Finding it advisable to begin this work at once, I entered a well-established law office in Bloomsburgh, Pa., my present home. The past year, 1887–88, I have spent in teaching the Classics and English at the Highland Falls Academy, a preparatory school for West Point candidates, and at the same time have pursued the study of the law. I intend to finish my law studies at Bloomsburgh during the coming year, and to make my home there — at least for the present. I have also travelled somewhat extensively throughout the West, and met with many interesting and novel features of life. Such is a brief résumé of the past three years."

HENRY FOSTER LEWIS.

"Since graduation I have studied in the Harvard Medical School, class of '88. In December, 1887, I was appointed house officer in the Boston City Hospital, and since January of this year have worked in the Out-patient Department as Externe. In March, 1888, I took the examinations in Chicago for the Cook County Hospital, and was appointed Interne, to begin service October 1."

Travelled in Europe during the summer of 1887 in company with W. W. Winslow.

LAWRENCE LITCHFIELD.

"During the summer of 1885 I was at Nantasket Beach, Mass. In the fall I entered the Harvard Medical School, where I spent the winter. The summer of 1886 I spent in Europe, and returning in September, continued the study of medicine at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, whence I graduated in March, 1888, obtaining at the same time an appointment to Bellevue Hospital for eighteen months, which I am now serving.

"The summer of 1887 I spent in Davenport, Ia., studying and looking out for the sick in the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of that State."

JOSEPH MANSFIELD LONG.

"My life has been very uneventful since leaving college, the three years having been spent at Newton Theological Institution in preparation for the ministry. I expect to become a settled pastor in the fall."

DANIEL WILLIAM LOTHMAN.

Has devoted himself to teaching, since leaving college, in Cleveland, O.

JOHN FRANCIS MAHONEY.

"After leaving college I entered the Harvard Medical School, graduating in 1887. I accomplished this early graduation from the Medical School by anticipating the first year's studies during my Senior year in college. I was thus enabled to complete the three years' course in two years. After graduating I spent six months with an older physician in Charlestown, Mass. From there I came to Chelsea, where I still reside."

Is a member of the Alter Ego Society of Chelsea.

EDWARD DUDLEY MARSH.

Before graduation was married in Boston, on Feb. 14, 1884, to Elizabeth May Stedman. Has been, and is, a private tutor, living most of the time in Boston.

MANTON MAVERICK.

Taught school for one year at Whitefield, N.H. Has, since that time, been a clerk in the War Department, Washington, D.C., and studying law at Columbian University in that city.

JOHN ROOFE MacARTHUR.

"Immediately after graduation I went abroad with a few classmates; spent the summer months in the British Isles and Switzerland; went to Paris for the winter of 1886, where I followed courses at L'École de Science Politique; and in the spring of 1886 made a visit to Italy and Austria. Thence I went to Germany, where I 'travelled among the universities,' Munich, Heidelberg, Leipsig, Berlin, till the end of the summer semesters. Thence, during the summer and fall of 1886, I travelled pretty thoroughly through Russia, Finland, Sweden, and Norway, crossed to Scotland, and arrived home late in the fall to attend the Harvard Law School till June, 1887. During the summer and fall of 1887 I had an 'outing' on the C., St. Fé, & Cal. R.R. extension through Missouri, Iowa, and Illinois, and returned late in the fall to the Law School."

In February, 1888, left America with his brother to travel in Egypt, Syria, Greece, and Turkey.

ROBERT LATIMER McCOOK.

Studied law at Columbia College Law School for two years, and has since been in the law office of Alexander & Green, at 120 Broadway, New York.

WILLIAM MORROW McINNES.

"The story of my life since graduation can be told in one short sentence. In October, 1885, I entered the Harvard Law School, where I have spent three busy and, perhaps, profitable years, and in January of the present year was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar."

Was a member of the Austin Law Club.

EDMUND SMITH MIDDLETON.

"Summer after graduation was spent quietly in Windsor, Conn. From September, 1885, to June, 1886, travelled to San Francisco and through the West on business. Summer of 1886 was spent in the Catskills. While in the mountains, wrote a number of poems (my first attempt). Several of these poems have since been published. Entered Junior class in General Seminary of the Episcopal Church, New York City, in September, 1886. Elected Junior Precentor for year 1886–1887. During the seminary year was lay reader and assistant at Calvary Chapel, New York. Published three poems during this year, 1886–1887. Summer of 1887 was spent in New Jersey, with Trenton as headquarters. Had interesting time looking up some old family records in the State-House. Returned to the General Seminary in September, 1887, to go on with the middle year. During the seminary year, 1887–1888, lay reader in charge of Christ Church, Pompton, N.J. On Saturday, Jan. 21, 1888, won 'The Seymour Prize,' a gold watch, for extemporaneous preaching. Have published four poems during the present seminary year, 1887–1888."

EZRA PALMER MILLS.

"It will take but few words to tell my story. About two weeks after graduating, viz., on the eighth day of July, 1885, I was married to Miss May B. Meeker, of Bridgeport, Conn. About the 1st of September, 1885, I moved to New York City, where I have ever since resided. In October, 1885, I entered the Law School of Columbia College, and at the same time entered the law office of Fred. M. Littlefield, Esq., in New York City. I remained in both places until June, 1887, when I was graduated from the Law School, receiving the degree of LL.B., and was admitted to the bar of New York. On Oct. 1, 1887, I opened a law office in the Equitable Building in New York City, and on December 3 I was presented with a son. I am still in the Equitable Building, engaged in the practice of my profession."

JUSTIN PERRY MINER.

"In the fall of 1885 I took charge of the public schools at Grafton, Dak., where I remained till July, 1887. The chief characteristic of these two years was hard work, and very little occurred that could be of any possible interest to my classmates. In August, 1887, I entered the employ of D. D. Merrill, Publisher, St. Paul, Minn. I am still in his employ. (Thus endeth the first chapter.)"

ALFRED HENNEN MORRIS.

Returned to Cambridge in the fall of 1885, with the intention of obtaining a Harvard degree of A.M. In the following spring his health gave out; he left Cambridge, and has had no occupation since. Has been constantly on the move since that time, on account of ill-health; but his headquarters still remain Westchester, N.Y.

JAMES GREGORY MUMFORD.

"For the past three years I have been living in Boston, and studying medicine at the Harvard Medical School."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society and of the Puritan and Somerset Clubs, of Boston.

WILLIAM STANISLAUS MURPHY.

"Taught school the first year, the second year taught night school, and was a clerk in Boston Custom House. My third year I am also in the Custom House."

JOHN BREED NEWHALL.

"My career since graduation has been uneventful, but is nearly a continuation of my college course. I entered the Harvard Law School in the fall of 1885, and am still at that institution. At the December examination of 1887 I was admitted to the Suffolk (Mass.) Bar.

SETH NICHOLS.

For two years and a half after graduation was in the wool business in Boston. Since then he has moved to New York, where he is established in the oil and wax business for himself, at 143 Front street.

JOHN HAWKS NOBLE.

"In the fall of 1885 I obtained a clerkship in the offices of the Union Pacific Railway Co., at Boston, and in January, 1886, was transferred to the offices at Omaha, Neb., where I have been employed since."

WILLIAM BELDEN NOBLE.

"For two years after graduation, an invalid gentleman of elegant leisure — trips to Cuba and Florida, etc. In July, 1887, the care of an estate devolved upon me, and kept me busier. In the autumn of 1888, being well enough to attempt mental work, came to Cambridge, and entered the Episcopal Theological School."

ELIOT NORTON.

Has devoted himself to the law at the Harvard Law School, taking the full course. Was a member of the Ames-Gray Law Club.

EDWARD ISAAC KIMBAL NOYES.

"During the summer of 1885, and until February, 1886, I acted as secretary for Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard. In February I started as short-hand writer for the New England Furniture Exchange, a commercial agency connected with the furniture trade in the United States. I remained there one year, until February, 1887, when I changed to occupy a similar position for the manager of the Kansas Loan and Trust Co., of Topeka, in the Boston office. On the manager leaving, I took his place as agent, and am occupying that position, partly in Boston and throughout New England."

GEORGE READ NUTTER.

"In the first year after graduation I was President's secretary and assistant in English in the college. I then entered the Law School, and for the past two years have been studying law, retaining at the same time the position of assistant in English. My life has thus been busy, though not particularly eventful."

Is an editor of the "Harvard Law Review" and a member of the Pow-wow Law Club.

JOSÉ VICTORIO OÑATIVIA.

Was married at Albany, N.Y., on April 15, 1885, to Julia Blackwell Cushman, and has a son, José Victorio Oñativia, Jr. Continues to live in New York City, but has spent much of his time in travelling, both in this country and in Europe.

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH PARKER.

"After leaving college, in October, 1885, I entered the Law School of Columbia College, from which I graduated in June, 1887. Concurrently with my attendance at the Law School, I served as student, first in the law office of my father, in Newark, N.J., for one year, and, second, in the law office of Vanderpoel, Green, & Cuming, in New York City. In the fall of 1887 I entered the Harvard Law School, taking a special course of study, and I am still studying at the last-named place at the time of this writing."

Is a member of the Pow-wow Law Club, and has published an article on the "Nature of a Policy of Insurance with Regard to its Assignability."

GEORGE FAIRBANKS PARTRIDGE.

"After graduating, I spent a half year in the State Normal School, at Bridgewater, Mass. Since then I have been teaching two terms in a small High School at North Chelmsford, near Lowell, Mass., and a year and a half in a private school in Boston, which fits boys for Harvard."

JAMES KIRKE PAULDING.

Has become a journalist, and is on the staff of the "New York Herald." Is a member of the Century and Harvard Clubs, of New York City.

HORATIO PERRY PEIRSON.

"Immediately after graduation, I went into the dry-goods commission business in the employ of S. P. Dexter & Co., of Boston, and stayed with them until Jan. 1, 1888, when, owing to the death of one of the firm, the business was wound up. I then entered the employ of Sawyer, Burt, & Manning, of Boston (in the same line of business), as salesman, where I now am. I have lived at home since graduating, and nothing has happened to me that would be of interest to the class at large."

CHARLES ALBERT PETERSON.

Immediately entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a member of the class of 1888. He is taking the Electrical Engineering course.

REUBEN PETERSON.

"I entered the Harvard Medical School in September, 1885, and have now nearly completed the three years' course of study."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society, and a house surgeon at the Free Hospital for Women.

JOHN SANBORN PHILLIPS.

During the summer following graduation was married at Oneida, Ill., on August 25, to Emma Delia West. Went to Germany, and remained for a year at Leipzic, studying at the university. Has for a year and a half been engaged in editorial work with Mr. S. S. McClure, in New York City.

PALMER ELLIS PRESBREY.

"Banking at National Bank of Redemption, Boston, practically covers the whole of my existence since leaving college, and I feel unable to work up this fact into a sketch."

FREDERIC EUGENE PUFFER.

Tried paper-making at Mechanics Falls, Me., but left it to enter the employ of the Warren-Scharf Asphalt Paving Company. Has spent his time in some of the different cities where the company has been fulfilling contracts.

SHERIDAN PITT READ.

"My life since graduation has been full of those incidents of a private nature which, though absorbing and interesting to myself, are too trivial to mention for publication. The first year after graduation was spent mostly in Boston, with the exception of a few months in New York, when I was suddenly called upon, owing to my step-father's illness, to take charge of his business.

"On the 10th of June, 1886, I was married to Miss Anne Sewall Gardner Noyes, daughter of Col. Frank G. Noyes, of Nashua, N.H. Immediately after we sailed for Europe. We remained in Europe till January, 1888, living — when not travelling — in Paris, where I pursued my studies at the École Libre des Sciences Politiques. I was also a member of the Cercle St. Simon, one of the old clubs of the Quartier St. Germain.

"My son, Francis Gardner Noyes, was born in Paris, March 24, 1887. The following summer we travelled through Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. Since January, 1888, we have lived in New York, in which city, on the 6th of last April, our daughter Elizabeth was born — and this event ends the short and simple annals of my life.

"Since writing the above, I have associated myself with the firm of Russell & Co., of China, 60 Wall street, New York City."

Is a member of the Harvard Club, of New York.

WATERS DEWEES ROBERTS.

"I will write a sketch as soon as my life begins to become eventful."

Entered the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, where he is still studying. Spent the months from February to September of 1887 at Hanover, Germany.

CHARLES PROSSER ROBINSON.

"On leaving college I returned directly to my home in Hovey Township, Armstrong County, Penn., but soon went to Pittsburgh, and passed the preliminary examination for admission to the bar of Allegheny County. In the fall of 1885 I entered the Law School of Harvard University, and took the regular course. I did not, however, return promptly to the Law School in the fall of 1887, but remained in Pittsburgh, was admitted to the bar

Dec. 24, 1887, and about the 1st of April, 1888, returned to Cambridge and reëntered the Law School. I regularly spend the summer months (July and August) at Happy Retreat, my old homestead in Hovey Township."

EDWARD DRAKE ROE, Jr.

"After my graduation I spent another year at Cambridge, and obtained the degree of A.M. on courses in mathematics and philosophy. It was then my good fortune to receive an appointment in Shortlidge's Media Academy as instructor in Mathematics, a position which I have occupied for two years. These two years have been profitable, and I am thus far so well satisfied that I have not found any cause to regret abandoning the profession of medicine for that of teaching. I intend, however, for an interim, to pursue further work at Cambridge next year."

GEORGE WILLIAM ROLFE.

"During the college year 1885–86 I joined the Graduate Department at Harvard, working in original chemical investigations, under the direction of Professor Jackson, also as a laboratory assistant in general chemistry. In October, 1886, I was engaged as chemist by the Geneva Grape Sugar Co. (now Chas. Pope Glucose Co.), at Geneva, Ill., where I have since resided. I was married to Miss Mabel Parker, daughter of Col. F. W. Parker and Mrs. Frank Stuart Parker, Normal Park, Ill., Feb. 28, 1888."

Received his degree of A.M. in 1886, and is a member of the Deutsche Chemiesche Gessellschaft, of Berlin.

THEOPHILUS HUNTINGTON ROOT.

"Since graduation, teacher, preacher, and student. Two years teacher in the Rolfe Grammar School, Memphis, Tenn. One year student in Union Theological Seminary, New York City. During the summer of 1886, student at the Sauveur School of Languages, Oswego, N.Y., and during the summer of 1887, and until January, 1888, 'dominie' of the Dutch Reformed Church in East Williamsburg, L.I."

WILLIAM NOBLE ROUNDY.

Is engaged in business in Chicago, Ill. Is a member of the University Club of that city.

EDWARD TERRY SANFORD.

"The year after graduating I spent in Europe, in company with Bartlett, Carpenter, Hansen, and MacArthur, of our class. In August, 1886, I returned, and have spent the last two years as a student in the Harvard Law School."

Has been most active in several ways since his return to the Law School. Was instrumental in organizing the new "Southern Club of Harvard University," and its first president. Was president of the "Consolidated Signet" in 1887, a member of the Pow-wow Law Club, and is an editor of the "Harvard Law Review."

CHARLES AUSTIN SAWIN.

Still lives at home in Cambridge. Is in the National Bank of Redemption, of Boston.

ARTHUR BROWN SAWYER.

"On leaving college I travelled in the Eastern States until October 7 of the same year, when I began business with the firm of Lynch Bros., 59 High street, Boston, manufacturers of kid, morocco, etc., where I remained just one year. On October 7, 1886, I was employed by Phelps & Lombard, 79 High street, manufacturers of kid in Newark, N.J., and in Boston, Mass. In March, 1888, I was placed in charge of the outside business of the last-named concern.

"Since entering business, I have had one short vacation, which I spent in the Middle States."

WILLIAM MUNRO SEAVEY.

Has been in the leather business in Boston since graduation, Mayo & Seavey. Was married at Boston, on Oct. 22, 1886, to Alice Martha Hutchinson. Sept. 1, 1887, was born Marion Hutchinson Seavey, at Roxbury.

ARTHUR WESLEY SIM.

Entered the Harvard Law School, but was compelled to leave before the end of the second year on account of illness. Since Jan. 1, 1888, has been studying law in the office of the Hon. Peleg W. Chandler, of Boston.

ROBERT FIELDS SIMES.

Has studied law at the Harvard Law School; was a member of the Austin and Ames-Gray Law Clubs. Is a member of the Puritan Club, of Boston.

JOHN SIMPKINS.

Spends his winters in New York City, and his summers at Yarmouth Port, Mass. The management of several estates, some travelling, and the sailing of a "forty-footer" in summer have occupied his time since June, 1885. Is a member of the Union League Club, of New York, and of the Somerset Club, of Boston.

HARRY WILLIAMS SIMPSON.

"In October, 1885, I entered the Law Department of Columbia College, where I remained, attending the lectures of both Senior and Junior classes, one year. During the latter portion of this time I was also a student in the office of Freling H. Smith, Esq., in New York City. In October, 1886, I became a clerk in the office of Anson Maltby, Esq., of the same city, where I continued my study of the law. In May, 1887, I took the examination for admission to the bar of New York City, and was admitted early in the following month. Since that time I have been a clerk in the office of Eaton & Lewis, 120 Broadway, New York City, where I still remain."

Is a member of the New York Harvard Club.

ALFRED PERCIVAL SMITH.

"The sketch of the three years since my graduation is very brief. During 1885–86 studied further at Harvard, one year's work towards a Ph.D. In October, 1886, I entered the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and at the same time the law offices of Messrs. Wayne MacVeagh and George Tucker Bispham, and spent thus the years 1886-88. When admitted to the Philadelphia Bar in June of 1888, provided that I graduate then at the University of Pennsylvania, I intend to begin the practice of law here in Philadelphia, or rather should say, I intend either opening an office of my own, or else entering some office already established. After being a law student for one year, I connected myself with that illustrious training school for young lawyers, the Law Academy of Philadelphia, whose roll contains such names as the following: George Sharswood, David Paul Brown, Benjamin Harris Brewster, and many other illustrious names too numerous to mention. I had the pleasure of hearing one of the above — Benjamin Harris Brewster— deliver almost the last public address which he made. It was given before the Pennsylvania Historical Society."

EDWIN IRVING SMITH.

Was a private tutor for one year at Morristown, N.J. Then entered the Harvard Law School for the full course. Was a member of the Austin and Pow-wow Law Clubs and the Choate Chapter of Phi Delta Phi. Is an editor of the "Harvard Law Review."

WILLIAM CHRISTOPHER SMITH.

"For three months in the autumn of 1885 assistant editor of a Boston weekly paper; from February, 1886, to June, 1887, student at the Harvard Law School, taking the first two years' course; in July, 1887, admitted to the Suffolk Bar."

Has made contributions to "Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia." Was a member of the Pow-wow Law Club.

WILLIAM WHARTON SMITH.

"I have been in the law office of MacVeagh & Bispham since leaving college, and for the last two years have also attended the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania. I expect to get an LL.B. from the University of Pennsylvania next June, and to be admitted to the Philadelphia Bar in October. I belong to the Sharswood Law Club, the Fencing and Sparring Club, and the Young America Cricket Club."

GEORGE ANDREW SNOW.

"Since leaving college I have occupied myself with gaining a thorough knowledge of the stock brokerage and banking business, beginning at the 'ticker' and working up to my present position, which, though not that of 'Proprietor,' is yet but a step from it.

"I have nothing to say of my private life, which has been a sort of quiet, retired existence, not characterized by ambitious pursuit of any special nature."

MALCOLM STORER.

"In October, 1885, I entered the Harvard Medical School, and am still there."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society. Belongs to the Puritan Club, of Boston, and to the Harvard Club, of Rhode Island.

JAMES JACKSON STORROW.

"I have been studying law in Cambridge most of the time since my graduation. I have taken several short trips to various parts of the country, including Florida, Pittsburg, and Washington. I have spent the greater part of one summer in a law office, and have taken a canoeing trip of a couple of months in the woods of Northern Canada."

Was a member of the Pow-wow Law Club, and a graduate member of the new Advisory Athletic Committee of the University.

Died at Ashtabula, O., Jan. 5, 1887. The first graduate of the class of '85 to be stricken down was one whose earnestness, character, and ability made him conspicuous in college, and for whom a brilliant future career, honorable alike to himself and the class, appeared to be certain. With no ordinary measure of regret, therefore, are we compelled to record here the close of a life so singularly rich in attainment and in promise. Abner Ernest Strong was the son of Abner D. and Anna M. (Claflin) Strong, and was born at Ashtabula, O., on Oct. 5, 1861. At an early age he entered the Grammar School of his native town, and was graduated from the High School at the age of sixteen, being always the youngest and highest scholar of his class. About the time of graduation, in May, 1877, he decided to take the examination at Warren, O., for candidates for the U.S. Naval Academy; and although he had but one week for preparation, and arrived one hour after the beginning of the examination, he was only two-tenths of one per cent. behind the successful candidate, who had spent two years in preparation. In consideration of this record, General Garfield, then a Congressman from the Ashtabula district, of his own motion, nominated him for a cadetship at West Point. The following letter of General Garfield to the father is deemed worthy of reproduction here: —

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D.C., Nov. 26, 1877.

A. D. STRONG, Esq., Ashtabula, O.: —

DEAR SIR, — Yours of the 24th inst. is received. I have this morning written to the Secretary of War, nominating your son for the appointment to the Military Academy. I did not know his exact age, but stated it about seventeen. The law requires candidates to be of that age at the time they present themselves at the Academy for examination, which in this case will be on the 10th of June, 1878. I enclose a circular from the War Department, which will show the nature of the preliminary examination. I have no doubt, from what Dr. Thayer tells me of your son's examination at Warren, that he can pass the examination at West Point, especially as he will have from now till next June to prepare for it.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) J. A. GARFIELD.

Young Strong was not yet seventeen, and could not take the examination. The following three years of his life were spent upon his father's farm. His preparation for college was confined almost entirely to the six or eight months before entrance, and was entirely unaided. But thoroughness and efficiency always characterized his work, whether of hand or brain. He was found fully prepared for admission when he presented himself in September, 1885, and at once took high rank among those whose preparations had been more extended. Devoting himself to the Classics and Mathematics, he took honors in both subjects, was one of the first members of the Phi Beta Kappa Society from '85, and received a degree summa cum laude at Commencement. But he was something more than a thorough and able student; always a genial and stimulating companion, he made friends easily, and entered zealously into social enjoyments. Bringing from a Christian home a deep and stable Christian character, he was interested in all religious movements in the college, and as president of the Society of Christian Brethren for nearly two years, contributed no small share to the religious activity of the college. His naturally active temperament also led him to enter into athletic sports. In short, he attained, to my mind, a complete collegiate education, — an education derived from the use of all the advantages, athletic, social, scholastic, religious, which a college should offer.

After graduation, he was engaged during the summer of 1885 as a private tutor, and in the autumn accepted a position as instructor in Groton Academy, Groton, Mass. In February following, failing health compelled him to resign, and after a two months' sojourn in Florida he returned to Ashtabula. Believing, however, in August that his condition was improved, he returned to Boston, was examined for a teacher of the schools of that city, and was at once employed in the Public Latin School. He returned home in November for the last time.

The predominant characteristic of the life thus briefly sketched was its earnestness. His companionship was a constant stimulus. Whatever he undertook was performed with zeal and enthusiasm; it was therefore done with thoroughness. His physical and mental energy was unusual; it carried him irresistibly to the front in every rivalry of the field or the class-room; it knew no limit. Added to this was a genial, buoyant disposition, a kindly, sympathetic nature, and a strong sense of right and loyalty to Christian truth. No one who knew him well could fail to admire the strength and genuine manhood of his character. His was one of those natures whose outlines are clear-cut and firm. Thus, with intellectual gifts of a high order, he united the capacity to use them to the fullest and best purposes. Few, if any, of the class of '85, I venture to say, were better equipped than he for a successful career in its highest sense, — a career of helpfulness to one's fellow-men.

He was truly a victim of his own ambition. It urged him to exertion, both mental and physical, which was beyond his strength, and in an unguarded moment the fatal disease of consumption fastened itself upon him. For nearly a year he struggled against its advances, and in that struggle the iron strength of his will and his warm-hearted Christian character shone in a stronger light than ever before. His friends have, indeed, lost a generous, genuine, and cherished friend, and the class one of its ablest men. We must regretfully close the ranks as we press on toward future endeavors, but no one can fail to realize that the line is sadly weakened.

W. C. S.

CHARLES AUGUSTUS STRONG.

"Studied theology, Rochester, N.Y., one year; abroad on Harvard Fellowship, Berlin, Paris, Oxford, etc., one year; now instructor in Philosophy in Ithaca. My connection with Cornell University dates from last September, 1887."

EBEN SUTTON, Jr.

ARTHUR GORDON WEBSTER.

"The first year after graduation, an instructor of Mathematics in Harvard College; since then, a student in Physics and Mathematics at the University of Berlin, Prussia."

ALBION OTIS WETHERBEE.

Since September, 1887, has been a teacher in the Flushing Institute, of Flushing, N.Y.

CHARLES CHAPIN WHEELWRIGHT.

After learning the wool business with Edward A. Green & Co., of Boston, he set up for himself as one of the firm of Wheelwright & Macomber. Was married on April 27, 1887, at Cohasset, Mass., to Miss Laura Snow Tower.

FRANCIS WINTHROP WHITE.

"The story of my life since graduation can be told very briefly. I have been connected all the time with the Warren-Scharf Asphalt Paving Company, of New York, and have been stationed at different times in the following cities: Cincinnati, O.; Columbus, O.; St. Paul, Minn.; Savannah, Ga.; and New York, where I have spent most of the winter months. Nothing has happened to me that is of particular interest to myself, or can be of the least interest to my classmates."

Is a member of the University Club, of Cincinnati, O.

McDONALD ELLIS WHITE.

"My life since graduation has been very uneventful, and I have remained in Boston, excepting for a few weeks of vacation spent in Washington, Philadelphia, and New York. As a member of the First Corps of Cadets, I attended the Centennial Anniversary of the Ratification of the Constitution of the United States, in September, 1887. Since May, 1886, I have been in the wool commission house of Brown & Williams, and Alex. Williams, Jr., & Co., Boston."

Is a member of the Puritan Club, of Boston.

JULIAN LINCOLN WHITESIDE.

Is in the employ of the Lowell City Government, and also is a teacher of the Evening High School.

EDSON LEONE WHITNEY.

"I have not been very well this winter, and am considerably run down in health just now. Just what I shall do in the future is a blank. I have several plans ahead, but my health puts a damper on my hopes. The winter of 1885–86 I spent in the Boston University Law School, and during the spring I spent my spare time, two or three hours a day, in the law office of Stillman B. Allen. I took the examination for admission to the Suffolk (Boston) Bar in June, 1886, and was admitted. The summer of 1886 I spent in Minnesota; 1886–87, I continued my studies at the Boston University Law School, and received the degree of LL.B. from there in June, 1887; 1888 I am spending in the graduate department of Harvard, studying History and Roman Law. Last January I received $100 for a Bowdoin prize dissertation, 'Roman Senate under the Empire.' I am vice-president of the Berkeley Outing Club, am clerk of the Berkeley-street Congregational Society, and I hold also several offices in the various societies connected with the church."

CHARLES ALEXANDER WHITTEMORE.

"During the academic years 1885–86 and 1886–87 I studied at the Harvard Law School. From that time until April of this year I studied law in the office of Mr. Lewis S. Dabney and Mr. Frederic Cunningham, in Boston. In January of the present year I was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar. In April last I entered the office of Messrs. Balch & Rackemann, Counsellors, 39 Court street, and am now in that office. Since my graduation I have lived in Cambridge."

Is a member of the Cambridge Art Circle.

HENRY MORLAND WILLIAMS.

"I have been a member of the Harvard Law School during the three years since graduation. I continued to play lacrosse on the University teams of 1886 and 1887, and was a member of the Thayer Law Club. Last year I was one of the men to start the new 'Harvard Law Review,' and have acted for six months as its treasurer and business manager. Two vacations I passed the time in the offices of Boston lawyers, and the third, that of 1887, I spent travelling in Europe with one of my brothers. In January, 1888, I was admitted a member of the Suffolk Bar, and am now dividing my time between the Law School work in Cambridge and practical work in the office of the Hon. Henry H. Sprague, of Boston. Am a member of the First Corps of Cadets, M.V.M."

GEORGE LANE WINLOCK.

"Since October, 1885, I have been with the Old Colony Railroad and Steamboat Company, of Boston, Mass."

SAMUEL ELLSWORTH WINSLOW.

Has continued to live in Worcester, Mass., since graduation, where he is busily engaged in several manufacturing enterprises as corporate officer or partner. Is a member of the Worcester Club, and of the Harvard Club, of New York City, besides several societies for special objects in Worcester.

WILLIAM WARREN WINSLOW.

"At home and at Harvard Law School. In Europe summer of 1887. Life generally spent at home quietly, studying law. Spring of 1888, in North-west for a time. Admitted to bar of Supreme Court of Minnesota in March, 1888."

Is a school director in Punxutawney.

EGERTON LEIGH WINTHROP, Jr.

Is a lawyer, with an office on Wall street, New York City.

EDWARD FRANKLIN WOODS.

"Ever since our Commencement Day in 1885 I have lived at home, and attended business in Boston at the Maverick National Bank, where for the last two years I have been assistant bond clerk."

JAMES REED YOCOM.

"During the summer of 1885 I worked on the United States Geological Survey in New Hampshire and Massachusetts. Since then I have been studying medicine at the Harvard Medical School. Most of my vacations have been spent in work about the hospitals of Boston."

Is a member of the Boylston Medical Society.

EDWARD BLAKE YOUNG.

"In August, 1885, I came to St. Paul, Minn., where I began to read law in the office of Young & Lightner, and I am still studying in that office. In October, 1887, I was admitted to practice as an attorney-at-law. With the exception of a short visit to Cambridge in February, 1888, my residence in St. Paul has been uninterrupted. For the past two years I have been an active member of the Minnesota Boat Club."

TEMPORARY MEMBERS.

[The record of temporary members is nearly complete. No second attempt has been made to obtain returns from those of them who were much more closely identified with some other class, though in a few cases they have sent answers to the first circular. Of those whose only college connection was with '85, there is some record of all but four, whose present whereabouts could not be ascertained. It is gratifying to find that so large a proportion of the men who were unable, from one cause or another, to graduate, still take a lively interest in the class and its affairs, and have made personal replies.]

EVERETT VERGNIES ABBOT.

"As you know, I did not graduate with the class. I waited until 1886, and then went into the Law School, where I now am, and where I hope to stay another year. There is little more to be said. My time has been spent in the steady pursuit of the law, which I hope to catch eventually. I am not married, nor even engaged, and, in fact, my life has had no more incident than that of any other student of books."

Was a member of the Austin Law Club, and is an editor of the "Harvard Law Review."

LOUIS ALEXANDER BIDDLE.

WILLIAM DADE BREWER.

Graduated with the class of '86.

PRINCE LUCIAN CAMPBELL.

"After graduating with the Harvard class of 1886, I spent a few weeks at the Normal School, at Indiana, Penn., and came on in August to Monmouth, Ore., where I have since been engaged teaching in the State Normal School. I was married, Sept. 7, 1887, to Miss Eugenia Zieber, of Forest Grove, Ore. At the recent county convention of the Democratic party I was nominated for the House in the State Legislature, and am awaiting the election returns in June. I have found the West full of work to do, and presenting splendid promise of rapid and wonderful development."

Has published a few "fugitive scraps of verse."

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS CARNOCHAN.

"Entered the office of Messrs. Kidder, Peabody, & Co., New York, Aug. 1, 1886. Am there at the present time."

Is a member of the Columbia Chapter of Delta Phi, and of the Young Men's Democratic Club, of New York.

CHARLES HENRY CONVERSE.

Graduated with the class of '84.

ARTHUR DELORAINE COREY.

In consequence of a fever in the early part of his Junior year, he was obliged to leave Cambridge for that year, and, consequently, did not graduate with the class of '85. The next year he returned, and a second and severer fever, soon after, came near ending both his college experience and his life. On his recovery, however, he resumed his studies, and was graduated, ranking the sixth in the class of '86, taking final honors in Classics, and receiving honorable mention in Greek, Latin, French, and English Composition. He had previously received, in his Senior year, a Bowdoin prize for a dissertation, "The Dionysiac Theatre." He remained at the university in 1886–87, and took the degree of A.M. in that year. He was secretary of the Classical Club from its formation, in 1885, until he left Cambridge, in 1887, and was elected to the Phi Beta Kappa in 1886. He is now studying at the University of Berlin, Germany.

[This sketch is taken by permission from the report of the class of 1884.]

Aaron Rogers Crane, the son of Moses G. and Emeline H. Crane, was born in Roxbury, Mass., March 18, 1861. In 1866 his parents moved to Newton. At the age of eight he was sent to Chauncey Hall School, and remained a pupil of that institution for six years. In 1875 he entered the Newton High School and fitted there for Harvard, entering in the fall of 1880.

During his course he made friends of all those whose privilege it was to know him well. He was strong and warm-hearted, a young man of fine character and high aims, good sense, and mature judgment. Always dutiful, never despondent, he looked forward to an active and useful life. Singularly pure minded from any selfish thought, a picture of health, he seemed about to graduate with most bright prospects.

On June 4, 1884, his room-mate and classmate, Charles T. Hardwick, becoming alarmed at Crane's not rising, went to his bed and found him dead. He had passed away some hours before, probably from apoplexy.

Mr. Crane always evinced great interest in the athletics of the college. He played some on the Foot-Ball Eleven. Only two weeks before his death he had been a member of the tug-of-war team that represented Harvard at the Intercollegiate contest.

He was pronounced by Dr. Sargent the second strongest man in the university. He was a member of the first ten of the Everett Athenæum, and of the first eight of the H.H.

HURLBURD DUNLEVY.

Graduated with the class of '84.

GEORGE WELTON FISHBACK.

"My time since graduation has been spent in St. Louis and New York, and in many trips through different parts of the country on business and pleasure. With the exception of a year's sickness, my life has pursued its even tenor, as free from occurrences of note as that of the average man who starts to work out a career for himself and finds that the more productive his work in the accomplishment of his purposes the less eventful his life from the standpoint of interest to others."

Is a member of the University Club, of St. Louis.

GEORGE HERBERT FISK.

In the fall of 1885 he joined the first-year class of the Harvard Medical School, but did not continue the study of medicine after that year. Following that he spent over a year in Australia. He is now in California, in the land business.

JOHN GILBERT FOLLANSBEE.

Since leaving college has spent his time in the State of Chihuahua, Mexico, and New Mexico, engaged in the pursuits of raising cattle and investing in land. Is a member of the Union Club, of San Francisco, Cal.

* JAMES COLEMAN FORD.

[This sketch is copied from the 1884 class report by permission.]

The family of James C. Ford came from England in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and settled near Dumfries, on the Occoquan river, in Prince William County, Va., where some of their descendants yet reside. Edward Ford, the great-great-grandfather of our classmate, removed, with a numerous family, in 1797, to Kentucky, and settled in what is known as the "Blue Grass" region of that State, near Lexington.

James Coleman Ford, the only son of Robert T. Ford and Marie Eloise Gordon, daughter of Col. John Gordon, of Charleston, S.C., was born in July, 1861, in Louisville, Ky., at the home of his grandfather, after whom he was named. Born at the opening of the Civil War, his earliest years were passed in the mountains of North Carolina, at the country-seat of Governor Bennett, of Charleston.

At the close of the war he accompanied his father and family abroad, residing for three years in France, when, returning to America, they remained until 1873, chiefly on a country-place near the Hudson river, in Dutchess County, N.Y., where James was instructed at home by the Rev. Mr. Olmsted, Rector of the Episcopal Church at Rhinebeck. His family again going abroad, James spent two years in Dresden, returning to go to St. Paul's School, Concord, N.H., where he remained until suddenly recalled to Kentucky by the death of his mother. His preparation for college was at home with a private tutor until the autumn of 1880, when he came up to Cambridge and was admitted to the Freshman class.

He left college in the middle of Junior year, and, after having passed a year on the Pacific coast, engaged in cotton-planting at "Buckmeadow," an estate on Lake Providence, La., which his father and grandfather had cultivated for sixty years. He came North and spent the summer and early autumn of 1885, and died suddenly of heart disease in the city of New York, Nov. 26, 1885, in the twenty-fifth year of his age.

The class of '84 could have lost few men whose death would be more deeply felt, and by so large a circle of friends. In every gathering, his tall, manly figure and bright face were a welcome sight, and wherever he came cheerfulness and high spirits seemed to accompany him. His fund of humor appeared to be inexhaustible, and to all but his most intimate friends he seemed a man who could never know the meaning of a dark hour. Those who were nearest to him, however, knew that he was at times subject to a profound melancholy from which it was almost impossible to rouse him. These periods of depression were as often caused by some misfortune to a friend as by anything that concerned himself, for with his singularly sympathetic and affectionate nature, the cause of a friend always became his own.

In the social life of Cambridge he was very prominent, being elected to the first ten of the Institute 1770, the A.D. Club, and, after he had left college, as an honorary member of the Hasty Pudding. He was one of the best boxers in college, a good shot, and, like all Southern gentlemen, a thorough horseman. Though not in the college sense a student, he was well read in English Classics, and fond of discussing new books and poetry, beside taking a considerable interest in art and music. Occasionally he himself wrote very creditable verses, but made no attempt to publish them.

In all his ways he was thoroughly manly, upright, and straightforward, and his sunny disposition won for him friends in every class in Cambridge n his time. It is perhaps not too much to say that there was no man in 1884 for whom so many felt a real affection, nor any whose untimely death could have brought such a painful sense of personal loss as his.

R. S. M.

GARDINER FRYE.

In the year 1885 he entered the Harvard Medical School, where he pursued his studies for upwards of two years. He then went to the Medical School at Burlington, Vt., to complete his course in medicine. Received degree of M.D. from the University of Vermont. Has not been in the best of health.

JOHN MORRISON-FULLER.

For the first year after he left Cambridge he taught school at the Military Academy in North Granville, N.Y. Since that time he has been engaged in scientific investigations of a biological and sociological character. He was married in May, 1887, at San Francisco, Cal., to Miss Berenice Morrison, of St. Louis. At the time of his marriage he changed his name from John Powell Fuller to John Morrison-Fuller.

EMLYN METCALF GILL.

"Went on 'Boston Globe' in the summer of 1885 to do yachting, and also did correspondence for the 'New York Herald.' In the fall became assistant night editor of the 'Globe,' and remained in that position until the beginning of the next yachting season. In June, 1886, began to do general New England work for the 'New York Times.' In the fall of 1886 I left Boston, and in January, 1887, took a position with the Lithographoid Engraving and Printing Company, at 34 and 36 North Moore street, N.Y. In May I bought the engraving department, and since that time have made a specialty of reproducing books in fac-simile, as well as doing all kinds of photo-engraving. The 'Encyclopædia Britannica' has been reproduced by my process of photo-electrotyping, or 'the gelatine process,' as it is described."

WARREN RANDALL GILMAN.

FRANCIS WARREN HASTINGS.

Is a draughtsman with the firm of Hook & Hastings, organ builders, in Boston, and continues to live at Kendall Green, Mass.

LUCIUS JUNIUS HENDERSON.

"Shortly after leaving college I became a member of the dramatic profession, making my first appearance Monday evening, Nov. 3, 1884, as a member of the company supporting Madame Janisch. Since that time I have played one season with Madame Modjeska, one with Mr. Edwin Booth, and this season have been a member of the company selected to support Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett, in their joint interpretations of Shakspeare's masterpieces. An actor's life, in these days, is that of a wanderer and a nomad. Habitation, strictly speaking, he has none; but change, that in its persistent movement becomes almost monotony, is the rule of his existence. He may travel an entire season, playing each night in a different town, and it is an event to be noted and hailed with delight, when (to use a bit of professional slang) he 'strikes' a succession of 'one and two week stands.' This can scarcely be called the ideal life, and yet I am convinced that, with all its drawbacks, the dramatic profession offers to its faithful votaries rewards as brilliant, if not as lasting, as those to be gleaned in any other walk of life. To witness the splendid tribute of admiration and applause paid by overwhelming audiences, throughout the length and breadth of this land, to the genius of Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett, is an experience well calculated to inspire the young actor with deep respect for his calling. Artistic excellence depends upon conditions so numerous and so varied that it is well-nigh impossible from the beginning to predict anything definite of the end; but to struggle on at a distance, however humble, in the footsteps of artists such as I have named — provided only it be with a purpose earnest and sincere — can scarcely, I think, be esteemed an ambition altogether unworthy."

GEORGE HEYWOOD.

Graduated with the class of '83.

FRANK HITCHCOCK.

Is engaged in the manufacture of pig iron at his home, Youngstown, O.

WILLIAM HARRISON HOLLIDAY.

"Was thrown from my bicycle in October, 1884, and, as a result of the severe shock, was forced to leave college. Travelled ten months in Europe, from January, 1885, to October, 1885. Returned to Cambridge, hoping to be able to join class of '86, but found my head gave me so much pain that I could not do any good at studying. Went home to St. Louis, Mo. Spent two months at Hot Springs, Ark.

"Wrote to Dean of Harvard College, April, 1886, asking permission to take part of my final examinations in June, 1886. Received a favorable telegram from Dean Smith. Arrived in Cambridge May 1, 1886, and succeeded in passing all my final examinations in June, receiving a degree, 'Cum Laude,' with the class of '86.

"After receiving a degree from the Eastman National Business College, I came to Los Angeles to engage in the banking business.

"I am now connected with the South California National Bank. And I always consider myself an '85 man."

WILLIAM JOHN HOPKINS.

"After leaving college, in 1883, I entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and took up electricity. I completed that course in two and a half years, taking also, during the last half-year, some special studies at Harvard. I graduated from the institute in 1886, and immediately entered the employ of the Boston Mfrs. Mutual Fire Insurance Co. as draughtsman. Leaving that company at the end of three months, I was for two months in the employ of the New England Weston Electric Light Co., but returned, in December, 1886, to the Boston Mfrs. Mutual Fire Insurance Co., in the capacity of inspector. After continuing there for more than a year, about Christmas, 1887, I came to the American Bell Telephone Co. as one of their electricians, which position I now hold."

RICHARD FLINT HOWE.

Graduated with the class of '84.

EDWARD VERNAM HULL.

A friend writes: "Hull, after leaving college, came direct to St. Louis, and, after clerking for a year or so, went into the lumber business, being one of the incorporators of the National Hardwood Lumber Co., of which corporation he became secretary and treasurer."

KIRK KINNEY.

After living six years at his home, Cincinnati, he went West about a year ago, and is now engaged in the stock brokerage business in San Francisco.

LOUIS KRUMBHAAR.

Is in business in Philadelphia, Pa. Is unmarried.

ROLLIN NORTH LARRABEE.

"Ill health since leaving Harvard has forced me to seek an out-of-door life, and since the fall of 1885 I have lived in Kansas and Texas. In Kansas I worked three months on a stock farm near Wichita and Arkansas City, but left that work in January, 1886, and found employment in the X. I. T. Ranch, of 3,000,000 acres, in the Panhandle, of Texas. For about two years I lived in a cow camp, one hundred and fifty miles from the nearest railroad, keeping the ranch books and accounts, and sleeping, winter and summer, in a tent. For the last five months I have had charge of the supply department of the ranch, distributing pork and beans, etc., to the camps, one hundred and seventy-five miles south and ninety miles north, by the roads. The real length of the ranch is only two hundred miles. It belongs to the Capital Freehold Land and Investment Co. (limited); or, more properly called, the 'Capital Syndicate,' which is building the Texas State-House.

"Chicago, Ill., is my home, and thither I hope soon to return, my health permitting."

GEORGE HEES LEDLIE.

Graduated with the class of '84.

JAMES THOMPSON LENNOX.*

James Thompson Lennox was born in Albany, N.Y., March 9, 1863.

He was the only son of James Thompson Lennox, a prominent merchant of that city. His father died when James was two years old, but his mother continued to live in Albany until 1873, when she went abroad, and placed him at school in Paris. As a child he was naturally studious, never requiring urging, but rather to be restrained from over study. He remained in Paris one year, and on his return to New York entered Charlier Institute with the view of preparing himself for Harvard University. He graduated from the institute at the age of seventeen, but on account of his delicate health, it was thought best that he should wait a year before entering college. However, he passed his preliminary examinations at once, and spent the following winter preparing for the final examinations. These he passed successfully in New York, and in the fall of 1881 entered college without conditions and with credit.

He was a conscientious and faithful student, loving study for its own sake.

During the six years of his attendance at Charlier Institute, he ranked among the first in all his classes, and his record while at college gave every promise of successful graduation. He gave but little time to athletics, though a member of the Harvard Athletic and Lacrosse Associations.

While at home during the Christmas vacation of 1882, he was far from well, but insisted on returning to college to take the February examinations. The necessary effort completely prostrated him; he returned home, and pneumonia setting in, he was dangerously ill. He was taken to Aiken, S.C., and for a time seemed to improve; he hoped indeed to return to college the following year. But the improvement was only temporary, and consumption developed rapidly.

As a last resort, he went to the Adirondacks, where he remained, winter and summer, until the spring of 1886. Then, as he was failing very fast, he returned to New York, where, at first, he seemed to rally a little. But the weather becoming very warm, he longed for the mountains, and was therefore taken back to Paul Smith's, where he died Friday morning, May 28, 1886, aged twenty-three years.

He is buried in the Albany Rural Cemetery.

Of a reserved and thoughtful nature, he possessed a high sense of honor, justice, and, above all, truth. During the three years and a half of his illness, his gentleness and patience were unvarying; never in all that time did he utter one word of complaint. This brief sketch can have no more fitting close than the following lines, written by one of his few intimate friends, a classmate at college: —

"He had a keenly analytical mind, and his life after leaving college is noteworthy as a young student's attempt to make headway with the speculative problems of life and death. He knew of the progress of his disease and its probable end, and this was his stimulus to reading and study. His life, thus spent, became a conflict between tenacious religious beliefs and an equally tenacious critical purpose. His memory is an inspiration to the few college friends who knew him best."

M. E. L.

PHILIP LIVINGSTON LIVINGSTON.

"On leaving college went to live with my family in New York, entered Columbia Law School, and began the clerkship required for admission to the bar in the office of Anderson & Man, No. 54 Wall street. Joined the Delta Phi Fraternity at the Delta Chapter, and the St. Nicholas Club, and the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, and the Westchester Country Club. In June, 1887, took a degree of LL.B. from Columbia Law School, and was admitted to the New York Bar. Was offered a position in the office of Davies & Rapallo, No. 32 Nassau street, which I accepted, and there I still remain. Shortly after this became a member of the New York Bar Association.

"In November, 1887, my family went to Europe, since which time I have lived at the St. Nicholas Club."

Is a member of the 7th Regiment, Nat. Guard, S.N.Y.

WILLIAM LYMAN LUTHER.

"After leaving college I spent a year in Brockton, Mass. Sickness drove me from Eastern life, and since then I have been on the range in Montana, handling all kinds of stock."

JOSEPH MARQUAND.

He left college during Junior year, on account of his health, and was compelled to remain idle for several years for the same reasons. Recently having entirely recovered, he has entered the banking house of Blake Bros. & Co., of New York City.

HENRY WHEELWRIGHT MARSH.

"Should be pleased to hear from any one owning improved real estate in Chicago." Is in the fire-insurance business in that city, being one of the firm of R. A. Waller & Co.

SIDNEY WALKER MILLER.

"As my expenses at college were more than I had calculated on, and as I had received an offer from my brother, who was then a broker on the Board of Trade in Chicago, I left college in the winter of 1882. Ever since have I regretted doing so; but as I only had barely enough to finish my course at college, I thought it would be wiser to leave before my little capital was entirely exhausted. In 1883 I married a teacher of German in one of the public schools of Chicago. I worked about a year as book-keeper for Warder, Bushnell, & Glessner, but was forced to go South on account of my rheumatism, which thrived better in Chicago than I did. I went to Florida in 1884, but returned to Chicago, and in 1885 went to Mexico, where I worked for a Mining Company as assayer, major-domo, and mining engineer. The company failed and I with it. In 1887 I came to Pasadena, Cal., and associated myself with J. M. Willard, the City Engineer, under the name of Willard & Miller, Civil Engineers. In 1888 a certain Mr. Aug. Mayer was appointed City Engineer, and I as Assistant City Engineer."

JAMES LEO MITCHELL.

WILLIAM BRISBANE RAND.

"Upon leaving college, engaged in mercantile business of heating, lighting, and ventilation, under the firm name of A. W. Rand's Sons, in Philadelphia, Penn. In May, 1886, accepted a position with Equitable Mortgage Co., of Kansas City, in its New England agency at Boston, Mass. On May 24, 1887, married Miss Annie V. Crowell, of Philadelphia, Penn. March 13, 1888, birth of a son, Monroe Crowell Rand, at Boston, Mass. Am residing now in Boston, Mass., and since November, 1887, have been in business for myself."

Is a member of the Harvard Club, of Philadelphia.

FERDINAND REIS, Jr.

Is in business in San Francisco, Cal.

* RUPERT SARGENT.

[This sketch was written for the class report of '84, with which class he was more closely identified, and is copied by the kind permission of the Secretary.]

Rupert Sargent was born in New York City, March 27, 1863. He was drowned Aug. 12, 1883, in the wrecking of the yacht "Mystery" off Cuttyhunk, Mass. His father, George Henry Sargent, is senior partner of the firm of Sargent & Co., hardware manufacturers, of New York City. His mother was Sarah (Shaw) Sargent, of Nantucket.

Rupert was brought up in New York City and was fitted for college at the school of Arthur H. Cutler. He entered with the class of '84, but after remaining in Cambridge two years went into his father's New York store to learn the business, his natural tastes leading him in that direction.

While at college he was fond of athletic exercise, and excelled in running.

His circle of immediate friends esteemed most highly association and companionship with one so loyal to his friends, so generous and sympathetic to all. His life was one of happiness, and he bade fair to be of service to the world. But it was not to be. In company with his brother, Leicester Sargent, of the class of '79, and two other friends, our classmate started from New Haven on a yachting trip to Nantucket. The second day out they were last seen starting across Vineyard Sound. A few days afterward the wreck was found, and later on young Mr. Sargent's body. Our class-mate, strong and self-reliant, had been suddenly taken from the world when everything had seemed bright and full of promise to him.

EDWARD JAMES SARTELLE.

"After working a year as agent of State Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Worcester, Mass., was given General Agency for Middlesex County, with office at 45 Central street, Lowell, Mass."

Has been active in local politics. Was married at Townsend, Mass., on Sept. 22, 1887, to Lilla M. Larkin, of that town.

CHARLES La FAYETTE SIMMONS.

"Upon leaving college at the close of my Freshman year, I entered the Harvard Law School and remained there during the years 1882–83 and 1883–84. In September, 1884, I entered the law office of Sanford H. Dudley, in Boston, and there remained until January, 1886. In that month I was admitted to the Suffolk Bar in Massachusetts, and since that time have been following the legal profession in Baldwinsville, Mass. On the 21st of August, 1887, I was married to Miss Helena V. Eaton, of Cambridge, Mass., daughter of Mrs. Helena V. and Mr. George B. Eaton, and have lived, since my marriage, in Baldwinsville."

JUSTUS FREELAND SOULE.

"After leaving college I was, until January, 1887, engaged in stock-growing on the Laramie Plains. I found some time for keeping up my Classics, to which I had given most of my time in college. Not finding my life on the ranch profitable in the sense I desired, sold out my interest in December, 1886, and was appointed instructor of Latin and Greek in Wyoming University, which opened September, 1887. I have since held the same position."

Is secretary of the Literary and Art Club of Wyoming University.

MILTON JEROME STONE, Jr.

"Can merely say that, since the time of my leaving college, in the first half of the Junior year, on account of the accident which befell me, and also general ill-health, I have been in the book business in Boston, and have also been doing newspaper work for the 'Advertiser' and 'Record,' and am now connected with the 'Boston Herald.'"

FRANK THANHOUSER.

"After leaving college I read law with Judge John Martin, at Topeka, Kan., for one year.

"Sept. 1, 1885, I came to Garden City, Kan., as chief clerk of the United States Land Office at that place, and have since been admitted to the bar and appointed United States Commissioner.

"I still reside at Garden City, Kan., and am still engaged in the occupations named."

Is a member and a trustee of the Sequoyah Club, of that city.

* GREENOUGH THAYER.

Born at Salem, Mass., July 6, 1862. Drowned at Ogunquit, Me., Aug. 23, 1883.

See Report I., pages 96, 97.

JOHN RODOLPH URNER.

After leaving college in Freshman year, on account of trouble with his eyes, he began the study of law. Was at first in Kansas City, Mo., for five months, and then removed to New York City. Continued his studies at Columbia Law School, was made an LL.B., and is now a member of the New York City Bar Association.

ARTHUR ALLEN WATERMAN.

Was for eight months Western agent of a Boston firm. For the remainder of the time has been Superintendent of the Harvard Coöperative Society, and a member of the copartnership of Waterman & Amee. On Aug. 11, 1887, was married at Cambridge to Miss Emma A. Fuller.

* JOHN CORNELIUS WATERS.

John Cornelius Waters, the youngest of the five children of John and Mary (Callaghan) Waters, was born at Charlestown, Mass., April 25, 1863. His parents were people of slender means, and he received his early education in the public schools. After graduating from the Charlestown-Prescott Grammar School, he determined to obtain a college education, and succeeded in preparing for Harvard by three years of study at the Boston Latin School. He was graduated from that school in June, 1881, and in the following fall entered with the class of '85 at Harvard. After completing the prescribed work of Freshman year, he devoted himself very largely to the study of the higher mathematics.

At the end of our Junior year he left college, intending to remain out only for a single year, and then returning to finish his work and graduate with '86. But this intention was never carried out. Upon coming home from a short vacation in the early summer of 1885, he was stricken with an attack of typhoidal-pneumonia, and, after an illness of three weeks, died on July 31.

At home, his mind was early recognized as superior to those around him, and, though the youngest of the family, he was left unrestrained to plan and carry out his ambitious desire for a higher education. During his college course he was known as an earnest and painstaking student, of a shy and retiring disposition. As he continued to live at his home in Charlestown, and devoted himself with great diligence to his work, he had but few opportunities to make friends or even acquaintances among his fellow-students, and he came and went a stranger to almost all of us.

GEORGE STANDISH WEED.

"Elected member of Assembly in November, 1886, representing Clinton County in New York Legislature. Delegate to State Convention in fall of 1886, and elected to Democratic State Committee at that convention, representing on that committee the twenty-first congressional district. At organization of State Committee, made a member of the Executive Committee; re-elected to the Assembly in November, 1887, without any opposition, no candidate being nominated against me, although county is strongly Republican. Am serving now second term in the Assembly."

Is practising law. Is a member of the Manhattan, St. Nicholas, and New York Clubs, of New York City, and of the Fort Orange and Komuk Clubs, of Albany.

EDWARD FRANKLIN WELD.

"Just before '83's Class Day, was taken down with severe illness, and remained an invalid for more than two years. Spent winter of 1883–84 in Florida, and the following summer in New Hampshire. In September, 1884, sailed for Europe. Returned in August, 1885. In fall of 1885 settled down as a special student in chemistry at Harvard, living in Boston. In January, 1886, entered Boston office of the Union Pacific Railway Company. The following May was transferred to their offices in this city, Omaha, Neb. The summer of 1886 I spent with a surveying party in Montana. Came back here in September, and have been stationary ever since. Have served the company in various capacities. Am at present chief clerk of the Supply Department. Am secretary of the local Harvard Club, and member of the Omaha Club."

* HORATIO HACKETT WELTON.

The subject of this sketch, son of Rev. D. M. Welton, D.D., was born in Windsor, Nova Scotia, July 26, 1858. He prepared for college in Horton Collegiate Academy, and matriculated into Acadia College, Nova Scotia, in 1877. From this institution he graduated in 1881, having distinguished himself especially in the Latin and Greek Classics. After this he spent nearly two years at Harvard, devoting himself principally to Greek, German, and English Literature. At this point he relinquished the purpose of following teaching as a profession, which he had cherished for some time, and resolved to devote himself to the study of medicine. In 1886 he graduated in medicine from the University of the City of New York, and, as the result of a competitive examination, obtained a position in the St. Mary's Hospital, Brooklyn, N.Y., where he remained a year, after which, in the fall of 1887, he entered upon the regular practice of his profession in Brooklyn. His career, which promised to be one of more than ordinary success, was suddenly cut short by an attack of dysentery from which he died in less than a week, Aug. 10, 1888. His gentle, pure, and unselfish spirit won for him the love of all who knew him. As he expressed it in his last hours, his chief desire to live was that he might imitate, in a distant way, the Saviour in healing and comforting the sick and sorrowful. He died trusting in Jesus.

D. M. W.

IRVAH LESTER WINTER.

"I have passed the time since my graduation as instructor in Rhetoric and Elocution at the Michigan Military Academy, Orchard Lake, Mich."

LEWIS AMASA WOOD.

After leaving college at the end of Freshman year, he went into business, and spent one year with the house of E. P. Strong, of Macon, Ga. Since then he has been with W. H. Wood & Co., of Boston, and has lived at Newtonville, Mass.

AMORY TRASK WOODBURY.

"After leaving college, entered a wholesale jewellery house of Boston; not liking that, went into a railroad office, — no chance to rise there; entered straw-hat manufacturing business as book-keeper, and after a year and a half of experience went into the business with M. S. Bassett, of Franklin, Mass., under the firm name of Bassett, Woodbury, & Co. Am now in that business; large factory, 160 feet long, with all the necessary adjuncts, stable, bleach-houses, dye-house, foundry, etc., additional. Business large and prospectively prosperous.

"I envy no man, and am happy in life and Alma Mater."

Married, Sept. 29, 1886, at Franklin, Jennie G. Hills.

* WILLIAM ANTHONY WOODSIDE.

Born at Roxbury, Mass., March 7, 1864. Drowned at Brookline, Aug. 3, 1884.

See Report I., page 97.

[These four gentlemen, members of the Lawrence Scientific School during our course, were closely identified with us, and, as they are all subscribers to the 1885 fund, their actions and whereabouts will be regularly chronicled in the class reports.]

WALTER ATHERTON.

"In the September after graduation I entered the architectural department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and took for one year a special course in architecture. During the summer of 1886 I joined the United States Geological Survey, and was stationed in Western Massachusetts. I remained with the survey until the end of the field season. In January, 1887, I resigned my position, and in the following March I entered the office of Carl Fehmer, Architect, in Boston, where I still remain. I have lived in Boston most of the time since leaving Cambridge."

Is a member of the First Corps of Cadets, M.V.M., and of the American Institute of Mining Engineers.

ELLERTON LODGE DORR, Jr.

Is a cotton buyer for the Boston firm of Ellerton L. Dorr & Co., of Boston. His business has compelled him to spend the best part of two years in Memphis, Tenn., to which he has to go in the fall, returning to Boston in the spring. Is a member of the First Corps of Cadets, M.V.M., of the Puritan Club, of Boston, and of the Tennessee and Jockey Clubs, of Memphis.

ALBERT SIDNEY JOHNSTON JENNINGS.

"On leaving college I went directly to New Almaden, where I was engaged in mining operations. My stay was interrupted by a visit to Berkeley, to carry on a post-graduate course in assaying, and to conduct some experiments on the condensation of quicksilver fumes by the discharge of electricity under a high tension. I also visited the gold fields of Plumas, Nevada, and Sierra Counties. In March, 1888, I came to Anaconda, Deer Lodge County, Montana, as assistant to the engineer in charge of the construction of the concentrating and smelting plant at that place. This position I have occupied ever since."

Is a member of the Silver Bow Club, of Butte City.

BENJAMIN BOWDITCH THAYER.

Is now connected with the Anaconda Mining Company at Butte City, Montana, in which city he has been for the last year. Is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers.

CLASS HISTORY, 1885-89.

On Commencement day, June 30, 1886, a regular meeting of the class was held at Hollis 4, Secretary Halbert presiding. As neither the secretary nor any of the members of the class committee resided in, or near Boston, it was voted that two members be added to the class committee. Mr. J. J. Storrow, Jr., and Mr. Henry M. Williams were unanimously elected members of the class committee. The secretary presented a report of the condition of the class funds. Mr. Davis and Mr. Davidson were appointed a committee to audit the secretary's accounts, and reported them to be correct. At the request of the Secretary it was voted that some member of the class committee be elected to serve as "Custodian of the Class Funds." Mr. Storrow was elected Custodian of the Class Funds.

The next gathering of the class was at a subscription dinner at the Parker House, Boston, on Nov. 5, 1886, the first day of the 250th anniversary celebration. Mr. Storrow, of the class committee, presided at a table surrounded by seventy-five classmates. John Codman acted as toastmaster, and Henry K. Swinscoe as chorister. Edward T. Sanford responded to the toast "Fair Harvard," and George R. Nutter read lines on the John Harvard statue. The others who responded to toasts were, Trask, Carpenter, S. E. Winslow, E. I. Smith, Sawyer, Simes, French, and Hobbs. Letters were read from Secretary Halbert, in Kansas City, J. E. Thayer, in Lancaster, and E. L. Thayer, in San Francisco, and a telegram, with best wishes, was received from Baldwin, J. H. Noble, and Weld, in Omaha.

In the following month of December word was received by the secretary and class committee of the birth of the class baby, Pauline LeRoy French. She was born at Newport, R.I., on Nov. 30, 1886. A "class cradle," in the shape of a Paul Revere porringer, and spoon of silver, appropriately inscribed, was thereupon dispatched to the fortunate young lady. Her happy father, in making acknowledgment, wrote: "I was overcome with surprise at the beauty of the porringer, though I immediately recognised the thoroughly emblematic character of the gift; it is indeed with a silver spoon that my daughter has been ushered into the class cradle."

The first break in the ranks of our graduates was caused by the death of Abner Ernest Strong, at his home in Ashtabula, O., on January 5, 1887. When the news of this sad event reached Cambridge, a meeting of his classmates within easy reach was held, and appropriate resolutions were passed.

Not six months later came a second shock to the class, when it heard of the sudden death of Martin Luther Bradford, Jr., on June 20, 1887, in Boston. An informal meeting was held on the 23d, and a committee was chosen to draw up the resolutions which are printed in the sketch of his life.

In the spring, 1887, Secretary Halbert paid a flying business visit to Boston and Cambridge. At his request a class meeting was hastily summoned, and met at 10 Appian Way, Cambridge, on the same evening, about twenty classmates being present. Mr. Halbert laid before this meeting his resignation as Class Secretary. An informal talk followed, and Mr. Halbert was persuaded to withdraw his resignation, and to continue in the position which he had filled so acceptably. The meeting then adjourned.

The second annual Commencement Day meeting of the class was held on June 29, 1887, at Hollis 4. In the absence of the class officers, Mr. Hobbs called the meeting to order. About forty men were present. A written report by Mr. Storrow, Custodian of the Class Funds, as to the status of those funds was received by the chair and accepted by the meeting. A committee of two, consisting of Messrs. Codman and Pierson, was elected to audit Mr. Storrow's accounts, to be presented at the triennial meeting of the class in 1888. The meeting then adjourned.

The triennial gathering, class meeting, and dinner was held at Young's Hotel, Boston, on Tuesday evening, June 26, 1888. The meeting was called to order before dinner, Mr. Williams, of the class committee, presiding. The chair stated that the business before the meeting was to take action upon the resignation of Walter A. Halbert as Class Secretary, and read a telegram from Mr. Halbert. Upon the motion of Mr. Storrow, the resignation of Walter A. Halbert was accepted, and it was voted that a successor be chosen by the whole class. Several men were nominated, but all withdrew with the exception of Frederick I. Carpenter and Henry M. Williams. The class committee was empowered to take charge of the ballot. The class then adjourned to the large dining-hall, and seventy-five men sat down to a dinner over which Mr. Storrow presided. The after-dinner exercises were of a very informal nature; but as the men stayed until a very late hour, and seemed in no great haste to go away, it may be judged that the dinner was very much enjoyed. Mr. Nutter read a few verses, and several men responded informally to toasts proposed by the presiding officer. The general verdict seemed to be that it was the pleasantest dinner which eighty-five had ever participated in.

The following Commencement Day the class had the use of Hollis 4, where the men gathered in considerable numbers, but no formal meeting was held.

In August the circulars relating to, and the ballots for the election of, a new Class Secretary, were sent out by the class committee, and the counting thereof was intrusted to James J. Storrow, Jr. The result is to be seen in the amended list of class officers on page 2.

The class will meet again this year on Commencement, in Hollis 4.

HARVARD, 1885 TO 1889.

That Harvard is a great institution could not fail to be impressed upon the mind of every one who was so fortunate as to be present at the celebration of the 250th anniversary of its foundation, held at Cambridge, Nov. 5–8, 1886. That though already great, it is a growing institution, I hope the few following paragraphs concerning its life since June, 1885, will impress upon all those of our number who are not near enough to see that growth in person.

The greatest event in the University history the past four years was, of course, that celebration. The number of Harvard men who registered their presence at the ceremonies was over twenty-five hundred. The published accounts of all that took place there were so full and widely distributed, that it is needless to dwell upon the details; but there were a few impressive scenes which must always remain fixed in the minds of those who saw them. One was the long procession of dignitaries, officers of State, the Faculties, and graduates to the number of eighteen hundred, winding its sinuous length through the college yard from the point of starting to Saunders Theatre. It was a procession in which intellectuality was the distinctive feature of the long column of faces, some topped by silver hairs, others those of middle age, and still others — and hosts of them — with the print of early manhood upon them. Another of those scenes was enacted a little later in the theatre, when that same great throng rose to its feet in a burst of enthusiasm at the climax of Mr. Lowell's oration. Great also was the enthusiasm of the twelve hundred men in Memorial Hall at the dinner of the alumni, when they applauded the speech of the President of the United States, and when the ladies, headed by Mrs. Eliot and the beautiful Mrs. Cleveland, entered the east gallery to hear the after-dinner speeches. On each occasion the throng sprang upon their chairs, and waving twelve hundred white napkins above their heads, cheered as if their lives depended upon their efforts. The first was the tribute of intelligence, irrespective of party, to the expression of noble sentiments by the Chief Magistrate of the nation, the second, to lovely woman.

In 1886 the agitation against compulsory prayers was ended by the surrender of the overseers; and in the fall of that year a new system of conducting prayers upon the voluntary principle was begun. Voluntary prayers, as now held, are conducted by the Plummer professor, Rev. F. G. Peabody, assisted by five preachers to the University. These gentlemen, selected from different denominations, take turns in officiating at prayers, and while so doing take up their residence in old Wadsworth House. Services, called vespers, are held during the winter on Thursday afternoons, at five o'clock, and the customary evening services on Sundays are continued.

A greater range of subjects is now allowed candidates for admission to college. The groups of subjects which may be presented are many and complicated, and cannot be given in detail here. Sufficient it is to say, that an admission to college may now be gained with a knowledge of only one of the two classics, Latin without Greek, but a tremendous amount of science, history, modern languages, English, and mathematics, stares in the face the man who turns to the new paths, thinking thereby in escaping Greek to secure a "snap."

In connection with this change and broadening of the range of subjects for admission, the college authorities have been doing yeomen's work in securing better methods and a higher scale of teaching in the preparatory schools, attempting to improve the teaching, not only of these newer subjects, but also the methods of teaching the classics themselves. In this way Harvard has not only benefited all the secondary schools, but has also diffused a knowledge of itself amongst them.

Whilst prayers have been made voluntary, the authorities continue to exercise even a sharper supervision over the attendance and movements of students than was the case four and five years ago, and the overseers seem determined to increase this surveillance, if a recent vote of that body counts for anything. This has led to some antagonism between them and the Faculty, and keeps them as unpopular as of yore with the undergraduates. What the outcome of this movement will be, perhaps we may see in the next three years.

Of gaps in the ranks of the familiar faces of the Faculty there have been several. Professors Asa Gray, Gurney, and Young are dead. Professors Torrey, Lovering, and James Russell Lowell have retired, and been made professors emeriti, and Assistant Professors Croswell, Dyar, and Preble have retired from the University.

The material welfare of the University has been improved by the erection of several new buildings upon the grounds. To each of the two museums, the Agassiz and the Peabody Museum of Ethnology, a large wing has been added to make room for the ever-increasing collections. Beyond Divinity Hall, and in line with it, a handsome fire-proof building has been erected to shelter the large and valuable library of the Divinity School. This is the outcome of a subscription started soon after the school received the gift of Prof. Ezra H. Abbot's library, that the books then acquired might have a safe and suitable resting-place. In 1888 the Hastings Fund, devised by the late Walter Hastings, subject to certain life estates, became available, and the University at once had plans prepared for a new dormitory building. This dormitory, known as Walter Hastings Hall, four and one-half stories high, occupies a commanding position near North avenue, upon the rise at the west end of Holmes Field. To get just the desired location, it was necessary to remove the old Walton House (occupied by Captain Eveleth, care-taker of the college grounds), and the remarkably fine elm tree beside it. Hastings Hall is built of a chocolate-brown brick, with stone trimmings, with numerous gables and slightly projecting bays. It is a most effective and ornamental addition to the college buildings. The work of completing it will take several months more.

Upon the cutting up of "Shady Hill," Prof. Norton's estate, a large portion of the celebrated Norton's Woods, lying contiguous to the vacant land in the rear of Divinity Hall, was purchased to increase the athletic fields. It is proposed that the college athletic associations now step forward and grade all this large tract, which will be, when completed, of sufficient size to allow of two full-sized foot-ball fields, side by side. This addition will be a great boon, and enable many more men to take part in active exercise at all seasons of the year.

Many large bequests and donations have been made to the University during the same period, and the year 1886–87 is especially notable as the first in which the University received over a million dollars. The largest gift, the bequest of H. Price Greenleaf, alone amounted to over six hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

Nearly half of this is to form a fund for the support of the library, and the income of the remainder is to be used for scholarships and other aids for needy and deserving students.

The University has continued to grow steadily in the number of its students. The catalogues show the following figures: —

	1884-85.	1885-86.	1886-87.	1887-88.	1888-89.
University:	1,586	1,662	1,688	1,812	1,899
College:	1,006	1,068	1,077	1,138	1,180

— an increase of 313 for the whole University in four years, of which 174 belongs to the college.

With this continued growth is seen an ever-increasing interest on the part of both students and graduates to foster the welfare and a knowledge of the University in all parts of the country. Witness the birth of new graduate Harvard clubs at Fall River, Mass.; Louisville, Ky.; the Rocky Mountains; Indiana; and Omaha, Neb.; and the Harvard Law School Association; and and of the clubs among the undergraduates, — the Southern Club of Harvard University; the Connecticut, Minnesota, and Pennsylvania clubs. A further glowing example of this interest of those who have tasted of the benefits that Harvard bestows was shown during the past winter, when a fully attended mass-meeting of the students who have come to Harvard from other colleges was held to express opinions, investigate, and refute the imputations cast upon Harvard for the lack of earnestness and morality to be found there. These men took up the cudgels manfully in behalf of their adopted Alma Mater. The result was a report and statement most favorable to Harvard.

Whether or not the spirit of "indifference" has lessened or disappeared, the number of enterprises attempted and managed by students continues to increase. The "Harvard Monthly" and the "Harvard Law Review," the Classical Club, La Conference Française, Deutscher Verein, Chemical Club, 'Varsity Club, Sparring Club, and others, have all been started since '85 left. On the other hand, the Everett Athenæum, the Shakspere Club, and the brass band have disappeared from the roll of college organizations. It has been whispered that the failure of the athletic organizations to gain victories which would call upon the services of the brass band for celebrations was the real cause of the demise of that once celebrated aggregation of brass and wind.

Certain it is that the following brief record of some of the chief athletic contests shows a balance of victories which is hardly favorable to Harvard's account. Can it be that the college awaits a new race of '85 men, our descendants now yearly multiplying, to lead them on again to victories, "ten straight," over all opponents?

University Race. — June 26, 1886. Harvard v. Columbia. Won by Columbia in 21 min. 38 sec.; Harvard's time, 22 min. 3 sec.

University Race. — July 2, 1886. Harvard v. Yale. Won by Yale in 20 min. 41 sec.; Harvard's time, 21 min. 5 sec.

Freshman Race. — July 1, 1886. Harvard '89, Columbia '89, Yale '89. Won by Harvard in 10 min. 52 sec., Columbia second, Yale capsized.

University Race. — June 27, 1887. Harvard v. Columbia. Won by Harvard in 20 min. 15 sec.

University Race. — July 2, 1887. Harvard v. Yale. Won by Yale in 22 min. 56 sec., Harvard's time, 23 min. 10½ sec.

Freshman Race. — June 30, 1887. Harvard '90 v. Columbia '90. Won by Columbia '90 in 11 min. 35 sec.

University Race. — June 29, 1888. Harvard v. Yale. Won by Yale in 20 min. 10 sec.

Freshman Race. — June 28, 1888. Harvard '91 v. Columbia '91. Won by Columbia '91 by four lengths.

Harvard sustained its only defeat by Columbia in 1886, but retrieved itself the next year. Last year it was decided that two University Races could not be advantageously rowed within so short a time of each other, and the Columbia challenge was declined.

The Class Races have resulted as follows: In 1886, 1, '88; 2, '89; 3, '87; and 4, and last as usual, '86. Winner's time, 12 min. 30 sec. In 1887, 1, '87; 2, '89; 3, '90; 4, '88. Winner's time, 10 min. 56 sec. In 1888, 1, '90; 2, '88; 3, 89; 4, '91. Winner's time, 12 min. 17 sec. In 1889, 1, '89; 2, '92; 3, '91; 4, '90. Winners were lapped by the Freshmen at the finish, who were rowing in excellent form.

Base-Ball. — In 1886, as in 1884, Harvard tied Yale for the championship, with a record of 8 won and 2 lost. A tie game was thereupon played at Hartford, and Yale won by the score 7—1. Comment is unnecessary — Winslow was wanting. The number of colleges in the league remained the same; but Williams was substituted for Dartmouth. In 1887 the league was reduced to Harvard, Yale, Princeton, and Columbia. Yale won three out of four games from Harvard, and the championship. Columbia retired from the league before the close of the season. In 1888 the three remaining colleges contested for the championship, and again Yale won three games from Harvard, and carried off the coveted prize, — the championship.

Foot-Ball. — Intercollegiate foot-ball was under a ban of the Faculty in the fall of 1885, and the students had to content themselves with a series of class games, which '88 won. The following year, 1886–87, Harvard lost to both Princeton, 0—12, and Yale, 4 — 29. In 1887–88, Harvard defeated everything but Yale, winning a signal victory over Princeton. The Yale game was hotly contested on the polo grounds, New York, and Yale came off victorious, after some disputes, by the score of 17—8. Last fall Harvard lost to Princeton, and the Yale game was never played, owing to a dispute as to the place of playing the game.

Intercollegiate Sports. — The Mott Haven cup was won in 1886 for the seventh successive time. Since then, Harvard has lost in 1887 and 1889, but won the cup in 1888.

CLASS SECRETARY.

[Following is the report of Mr. Storrow, appointed to count the votes.]

I have the honor to report the result of the election for class secretary. Shortly after the nomination of Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Williams, Mr. Carpenter withdrew his name, and therefore Mr. Williams was elected without opposition.

J. J. STORROW, Jr.

THE CLASS FUND.

[Especial attention is called to the following report and accounts prepared by Mr. Storrow, the Custodian of the Fund.]

On Commencement Day, 1886, Messrs. Williams and Storrow were chosen members of the class committee; this was partly because it was thought advisable to have some members of the class on the committee who lived in the vicinity of Boston and Cambridge, and partly because Mr. Halbert wanted to give up the care of the class fund. Upon Mr. Williams has fallen the greater part of the burden. He has undertaken the by no means simple task of collecting the subscriptions. Mr. Storrow has kept the accounts.

There does not seem to be anything connected with the management of these funds which calls for particular comment. The thing which has struck most forcibly those connected with the financial affairs of the class has been the extreme reluctance of their classmates to part with their cash. Those direct and stirring appeals, which were so effective in Cambridge, are no longer possible. About the only thing which can be done, is to send a notice, at more or less frequent intervals, to each of the delinquents. This course the class committee will continue to pursue with unrelenting regularity. Let no man think that he will escape these little reminders of his delinquency, unless some one of the following contingencies should happen: namely, that the class committee goes out of existence; that the individual in question sends notice of his positive present and prospective inability to redeem his promise; that he turns his toes towards the azure hue, or that he pays up.

The management of the class affairs and the class expenditures has almost of necessity devolved upon those members of the class committee who live in the East. At present these are Messrs. Williams and Storrow; they formerly had the advice and assistance of Mr. Hansen. It has been the policy of these gentlemen, in spite of the fact that our class fund is small, to be fairly liberal in our expenditures; feeling it was more important to maintain the unity and good-fellowship of the class, and with this end in view to contribute in every possible way to the success of our class reunions and annual gatherings at Commencement, than to endeavor to roll up a large fund for the benefit of future generations.

At the time of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary, notice was received from the treasurer of the Alumni Association, that the share of the class for the expenses of that celebration was $150. This was paid by the class, and of this sum the amount of $132 was afterwards raised by special subscription and deposited to the credit of the class.

The only expenditure which does not appear in the account below was in regard to the dinner given at the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary; but as this was paid for by those who were present, and not out of the class fund, and was entirely managed by Mr. Williams, it did not seem worth while to include it in this report.

J. J. STORROW, JR., in account with Class of '85, June 1, 1889.
